Irreconcilable conflict

When the evidence on material issues so conflicts that it cannot be reconciled, the appellate court will consider the fact that the trial court observed the witnesses, their manner of testifying, and must have accepted one version of the facts rather than the opposite.

Reasons for rule

"An appellate court does not, of course, see the witnesses nor hear their testimony. We have before us nothing but the cold record, whereas the trial judge is in a position to observe the witnesses while they are on the witness stand giving their testimony. He has before him the parties directly involved and can observe their demeanor and the demeanor of the witnesses during the trial, and is therefore in a far better position than is possible for an appellate court to be to weigh the evidence and to determine where the truth lies. It is because of this advantageous position of the trial judge that appellate courts, in reaching their conclusions in close cases where the evidence is conflicting, defer somewhat to the judgment of the trial judge, even though they are not bound by such judgment."

Effect of inspection disregarded

In considering the sufficiency of evidence on which state highway officers were restrained from constructing a drain in connection with a highway, the appellate court will disregard the effect of the circuit judge's inspection of the premises made before granting the injunction, since the law has made no provision for or provided any method by which the result of such injunction can be reviewed.

Reasons for rule

"It is strongly urged by the appellee that the trial court had better opportunity of examining the witnesses than we can have, and for that reason the finding of facts below should not be disturbed. It is true that we attach weight, even in an equity case, to the findings of fact by the trial court, because in some respects there are advantages available to the trial judge which are not available to us. On the other hand, cases come before us not infrequently where the trial judge was manifestly at a disadvantage because of the conflict and confusion of testimony. In such cases the real facts are sometimes so elusive and concealed that only a careful reading and re-reading of the written testimony in its completeness will enable a satisfactory finding thereon."

Effect generally of findings on written or documentary evidence see supra § 1660.

Conflicting depositions

(1) Chancellor's finding on conflicting testimony even where taken by deposition is at least presumptively correct, although not entitled to as great weight as would be accorded if testimony had been taken ore tenus.

reached by way of reasoning or inference from undisputed or established facts.[40]

§ 1664. —— When Reversed or Set Aside

The fact findings of the chancellor or equity court will seldom be disturbed or set aside on appeal, if they appear to do substantial justice, but they will ordinarily be reversed or set aside only where they are clearly wrong, without evidentiary support, against the weight or preponderance of the evidence, the result of legal error, or inconsistent with, or not properly deducible from, conceded or established subordinate facts.

The fact findings of the chancellor or equity court will seldom be disturbed or set aside on appeal, if they do not show substantial prejudice,[40.50] if they appear to do substantial justice,[41] or if they appear to have sufficient evidentiary support,[42] provided, in

(2) Where the case is tried on depositions which are so conflicting that different minds might reasonably reach different conclusions, findings of the chancellor based thereon will not be reversed, although the appellate court might have found differently had it been acting in the first instance.

Evidence taken before examiner

Fla.—Palm Beach Sash & Door Co. v. Rice, 1 So.2d 861, 146 Fla. 780.

Applicable to factual findings only

Principle that the decision of a single justice sitting in equity should not be disturbed on appeal unless clearly erroneous is applicable only to factual findings and not to decisions or rulings of law.

Me.—Lunt v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York, 28 A.2d 736, 139 Me. 218.

Evidence not misconceived

Fact that trial court places a different reasonable meaning on evidence than that urged by appellant, or that more weight is given certain reasonable inferences therefrom than appellant would give, does not necessarily constitute a misconception of evidence.

Duty of court to determine weight of evidence

"This being a suit in equity, it is our duty to examine the evidence, determine its weight, and reach our own conclusions with respect thereto, bearing in mind, however, the rule so often announced by this court that the findings of a trial court will not be disturbed unless we are of the opinion they are against the clear preponderance of the evidence."

Utah.—Silver King Consol. Mining Co. v. Sutton, 39 P.2d 682, 684, 85 Utah 297.

Number of witnesses

In determining whether the findings of trial court in equity suit are contrary to the weight of the evidence in the case, the weight of the evidence does not necessarily involve the number of witnesses testifying.

Test

(1) In a chancery appeal the test in determining whether decree should be reversed is not whether the evidence clearly preponderates against findings of trial court.

Mich.—McFarland v. Kinnee, 60 N. W.2d 324, 337 Mich. 484.

(2) The test as to whether judgment canceling deed on ground of fraud, incompetency, and lack of consideration should be affirmed or reversed was whether judgment was clearly against the weight of the evidence, and not whether judgment was against the clear weight of the evidence.

Okl.—Tindel v. Williams, 103 P.2d 551, 187 Okl. 482.

Evidence considered as a whole

Statute requiring supreme court in reviewing equity cases to determine whether judgment is clearly erroneous, requires court to determine whether or not the evidence, considered as a whole, is overwhelmingly against the findings of the trial court.

Mo.—George F. Robertson Plastering Co. v. Magidson, 271 S.W.2d 538.

Finding against uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony

Where the character of a witness for truth and veracity is unimpeached, and his testimony is uncontradicted, not contrary to circumstances in evidence, and contains no inherent improbabilities or contradictions which alone or in connection with other circumstances in evidence excite suspicion as to the truth of the testimony, it is the duty of the court to give the testimony effect and a finding of the chancellor against the testimony will be set aside.

N.J.—Cartan v. Phelps, 109 A. 291, 91 N.J.Eq. 312.

Mo.—Kidd v. Brewer, 297 S.W. 960, 317 Mo. 1047—Hunnell v. Zinn, 184 S.W. 1154.

Mere conflict does not prevent reversal if the appellate court concludes that the credible evidence clearly preponderates against the trial court's findings or that injustice was done.

Fla.—Winton v. Stone, 145 So. 845, 107 Fla. 636.

Mont.—Piersky v. Hocking, 292 P. 725, 88 Mont. 358.

Some or substantial evidence to support the findings will not save court is convinced that the findings or decree is without adequate or sufficient evidentiary support.[54] So, findings may be set aside if they appear to be the result of a misconception of the law as applied to the facts,[55] or the chancellor's failure to take competent evidence into consideration.[56] There them if they are manifestly against the clear preponderance of the evidence.

U.S.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Simons, C.C.A.Mass., 60 F.2d 30, certiorari denied Simons v. New York Life Ins. Co., 53 S.Ct. 93, 287 U.S. 648, 77 L.Ed. 560.

Utah.—Rockhill v. Creer, 189 P. 668, 56 Utah 119.

Wis.—Krahn v. Goodrich, 160 N.W. 1072, 164 Wis. 600.

Numerical weight of evidence

(1) Mere numerical weight of testimony against findings does not so conclusively establish that they are against the preponderance of the evidence as to require a reversal.

Ill.—Dalbey v. Hayes, 108 N.E. 657, 267 Ill. 521.

Ky.—Gillam v. Qualls, 283 S.W. 396, 214 Ky. 436.

(2) Findings based on the testimony of one witness who has testified from his personal knowledge and information will be approved, although they are in direct conflict with the testimony of two witnesses.

Miss.—Bradbury v. McLendon, 80 So. 633, 119 Miss. 210.

Misconception or prejudice shown

If the findings are so manifestly against the weight of the evidence as to show that the lower court misconceived either its force and effect or that its conclusions were induced by passion or prejudice, the findings will be reversed or set aside.

may also be a reversal where it appears that the inferences or conclusions of the lower court are inconsistent with, or cannot logically or reasonably be drawn from, conceded or established subordinate facts;[57] that the findings are arbitrary and capricious,[57.5] or that necessary special findings supported sufficiently by the evidence are in conflict with a general finding,[58] or where the appellate court entertains more than a doubt as to the correctness of the chancellor's findings.[58.5]

Where a finding is entirely foreign to the issues made by the pleadings, it has no weight in the appellate court, and, if such finding is essential to the decree, the decree must be set aside and the proper decree entered.[59]

Effect of burden of proof on sufficiency of evidence. Before a decree denying relief to appellant will be reversed, he must show a preponderance of the evidence supporting every fact essential to recovery,[60] but if, as thus tested, the preponderance of the evidence warrants a decree for complainant, a finding for defendant will be reversed.[61]

On the other hand, according to some cases, a finding of a fact in favor of a party having the burden of proving the same by evidence of a certain kind or degree will be accepted as conclusive, if it is supported by substantial evidence and not plainly wrong, without the appellate court giving regard to whether the evidence is such as fully satisfies the burden of proof;[62] but in other cases the appellate court has gone into the question of whether the party having the burden of proof has sustained it by the character and degree of evidence the law requires,[63] and reversed findings for such party where he has failed to establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence[63.5] or where the evidence is flatly in conflict and sustains a finding no more for one party than for the other.[64]

Bias, prejudice or capricious disbelief of evidence

(1) Appellate court will set aside decree based on trial judge's prejudgment of case, bias, prejudice, or capricious disbelief of evidence, but record must clearly show such facts.

(2) To charge trial judge, with capricious disbelief of evidence, warranting reviewing court in setting aside decree appealed from, there must have been willful, deliberate disbelief of apparently trustworthy witness, whose testimony one of ordinary intelligence could not possibly challenge or doubt, and such disbelief must be so flagrant as to be repugnant to man of reasonable intelligence.

4. FINDINGS OF REFEREE, MASTER, COMMISSIONER, OR AUDITOR

§ 1665. Conclusiveness in General

Ordinarily, findings of a master or referee, having support in the evidence, are given the force and effect of a verdict of a jury, or the findings of the trial court in a trial without a jury, and are conclusive on appeal, but not always, as where they are at variance with the proof or with each other.

The findings or report of a referee, master, commissioner, auditor, or register are given the same force on appeal as the verdict of a jury[65] or the findings of a trial court sitting as a jury,[66] and as a general rule these findings will not be disturbed.[67]

Absence of specific finding
Where it is agreed that the facts found are correct, the general conclusion found by the master will be sustained, where consistent therewith, despite the total absence of any specific finding on some particular fact which might, if specifically found against appellee, have demanded a different general finding.

referee had difficulty in coming to a conclusion does not invalidate it.[92]

When findings or report will be reviewed. While the court on appeal is reluctant to disturb findings,[93] they are not absolutely binding on it under all circumstances or in all kinds of proceedings,[94] and the reviewing court will look into the facts and may reverse where the evidence on which the findings are based is documentary,[95] or where the facts are undisputed or established, or the findings merely deductions from undisputed testimony, such findings being of no greater weight than conclusions of law,[96] when the findings or report are against the

Consideration of findings as a whole

A finding of a master must be taken in connection with his other findings.

Mass.—Fist v. Bower, 116 N.E. 568, 227 Mass. 315.

Effect of inconsistency

(1) Only where a general conclusion of fact purports to be based wholly on subsidiary facts specifically found and there is manifest inconsistency between the conclusion and the essential particular findings will the former be reversed.

(2) In guests' actions for personal injuries against automobile driver, in absence of evidence before trial judge other than auditor's report, auditor's general finding that each guest, in exercise of due care, received bodily injuries as result of gross negligence of driver, required finding for guests unless subsidiary findings were necessarily inconsistent with general finding or warranted inference, contrary to general finding, that driver was not grossly negligent.

Statute authorizing review construed prospectively

A statute, providing for a review of the facts on appeal from the judgment on report of the referee, not containing anything to indicate intention that it should have other than a prospective operation, will be held inapplicable to an appeal already pending, in view of a constitutional provision inhibiting retrospective laws, and a general statutory provision declaring against retrospective effect of repeal of laws.

doubt,[14] where the propriety of the findings depends entirely on the credibility of witnesses,[15] or where substantial justice appears to have been done,[16] unless they are manifestly erroneous,[17] unless the preponderance of evidence is such as to justify the inference that the findings were based on influences other than a due consideration of the evidence,[18] such as bias or partiality,[19] or unless the trial court would be justified in setting aside a verdict under the same or similar circumstances.[20]

This is so although the evidence would support a finding the other way,[21] or although the reviewing court might have found differently,[22] since it is not the function of the reviewing court in such case to pass on the weight of the evidence.[23] The fact that a party, appearing as a witness, specifically denies the truth of matters involved in his adversary's case[24] or that there is inconsistent testimony given by some of the witnesses[25] does not render inapplicable the general rules as to conclusiveness of the referee's findings.

Where supported by evidence, findings merely against the apparent weight of the evidence need not be disturbed on appeal.

As is the case with the verdict of a jury, the findings of a master, a referee, or a commissioner when supported by the evidence are not to be set aside merely because they appear to be against the weight of the evidence.[26] They are not to be disturbed on that score unless clearly and manifestly against the weight of the evidence,[27] and the master's decision as to the weight of testimony will rarely be rejected.[28]

Nevertheless, the reviewing court will not hesitate to examine into the sufficiency and preponderance of evidence when a proper occasion arises;[29] and if the findings are clearly and manifestly not sustained by the evidence,[30] or are against the weight of the evidence,[31] they will not be accepted regardless of that fact but instead will be discarded. So, too, the report of a referee will be set aside as against the weight of the evidence if he has been unduly influenced by inadmissible evidence,[32] or if the finding is based on testimony of a single witness, which is suspicious in nature and highly improbable in detail,[33] or is based in part on facts not proved which may have had some influence.[34]

§ 1668. Amount of Recovery

Generally, where supported by evidence, findings as to the amount of damages or relief awarded will not be disturbed.

Ordinarily, a finding of value or the amount of damages will not be disturbed by a reviewing court[35] where there is evidence to sustain the finding,[36] particularly where the finding has been approved by the trial court.[37]

The amount awarded will not be set aside as excessive where it does not appear unreasonable,[38] or unless the preponderance of evidence against the findings is so clear and decisive as to compel the inference that the referee erred.[39] On the other hand, the fact that a referee awarded a less amount than that fixed by the evidence does not warrant the inference that the evidence was wholly disregarded by him, but only that he may have considered it exaggerated.[40]

If, however, the amount awarded is manifestly not supported by the evidence, the findings must be set aside,[41] and the court may exercise its independent judgment as to whether it will accept the opinions and estimates of witnesses on questions of value.[42] Where the trial court, in the exercise of a judicial discretion, has reduced the amount of the award, the amount as found by the referee will not be restored even though the evidence preponderates in support of his findings.[43]

§ 1669. Approval of Trial Court

Findings concurred in, and approved by, the trial court are especially entitled to be respected and sustained on appeal, and generally will not be disturbed although not necessarily conclusive.

When approved by the trial court, the findings of fact of a referee, master, auditor, commissioner, or register will not as a general rule be disturbed by the reviewing court.[44]

Scope of review

Where legal issues of title and possession of land were tried by referee by consent, and his findings were adopted by court as its judgment, factual review on appeal to supreme court was limited to a determination of whether there was any evidence to sustain it.

or other person are mutually inconsistent,[58] or unless fraud[59] or abuse of discretion[60] is shown.

The mere fact that a finding to the contrary would be allowed to stand,[61] or that the reviewing court might have found differently,[62] does not authorize it to set aside the finding. After concurrence of the master and the trial court, the evidence will not be weighed on appeal;[63] only where reasons sufficient for granting a new trial appear will the court disturb the findings concurred in.[64]

Nevertheless, while the findings are always entitled to great weight on appeal,[65] the reviewing court is not conclusively bound by them, although approved by the trial court, but may, under certain circumstances, review the case and set aside the findings.[66] Thus, findings of a master, even when

Testimony by deposition

A master's findings, approved by chancellor, were not binding on appellate court where the two principal witnesses testified by way of deposition.

Ill.—Meyers v. Dorfman, 54 N.E.2d 235, 322 Ill.App. 120.

Where master made no ultimate finding as to title to pattern plates involved in dispute, supreme judicial court was required, on appeal, to draw its own inference without regard to finding of superior court.

Mass.—Bonifazi v. Breschi, 6 N.E.2d 816, 296 Mass. 544.

Where official referee's opinion specifically invites confirming court's review of fact findings, court will consider case unprejudiced by referee's decision thereon.

approved or adopted by the trial court, are subject to review on appeal, and may be set aside where they embody only conclusions of law or deductions from undisputed facts,[67] where obviously based on an error of law,[68] or where they relate to questions of fact improperly referred;[69] nor does the general rule that findings approved by the court will not be reviewed apply if the finding of the ultimate and determinative fact is not definitely stated by the referee.[70]

There is, of course, nothing to prevent the reviewing court from drawing further inferences from the facts found by the referee and approved by the trial court.[71]

§ 1670. Where Court and Master or Referee Do Not Concur

a. Disapproval of, or conflict in, findings
b. Independent findings of court

a. Disapproval of, or Conflict in, Findings

Where the trial judge disapproves the findings and makes his own, and that not merely as a result of different inferences or conclusions from the same facts, the appellate courts in some jurisdictions attach the presumption of correctness to the judge's findings, in others to those of the referee or master, and in still others exercise an independent determination from all the facts and evidence in the record.

The rule that the findings of a master, referee, or the like, when approved by the court, will be regarded as in the nature of a verdict cannot apply where the findings are overruled and disaffirmed by the lower court, instead the appellate court will sustain the conclusion of the master or referee or that of the lower court either on its own independent determination or by assuming the correctness of whichever of the conflicting findings is entitled to a presumption of correctness by the law of the particular jurisdiction.[72]

In some jurisdictions the court will, in such a situation, regard the finding of the trial judge as being prima facie correct,[73] and his findings will be sustained if supported by competent evidence[74] and will not be set aside unless unsupported by, or clearly opposed to, the preponderance of evidence,[75] the finding of the master or referee being regarded on appeal merely as a circumstance of more or less weight in testing the correctness of the chancellor's finding.[76] Where the record is not clear, the trial judge's conclusion contrary to that of the referee will not be disturbed.[77]

Elsewhere the rule, by statute or decision, is that, where the master has heard testimony and made findings based on it, he stands in a position superior to the trial court acting without the benefit of that factor and his finding will be adopted by the appellate court in preference to that of the trial court.[78]

In still other jurisdictions the reviewing court will exercise its own independent judgment and sustain whichever of the prior findings seems to it in accordance with the truth and the facts,[79] making due allowance for the fact that the referee had the benefit of observing the witnesses, where that is the case, and giving that circumstance proper weight in arriving at its conclusion.[80] Where the action of the court is accompanied by a statement of the reasons therefor, the reviewing court should consider the reasons given in the light of the entire record and of the weight to which the original findings are entitled, and arrive at its independent conclusion in view of such considerations, on the facts in issue.[81]

Inferences or conclusions. Where the trial court did not accept the master's results or conclusions, but based the decision on a different theory from that acted on by the master, without disturbing the underlying fact findings, there is no concurrence which will call for the operation of the rules stated in the preceding section.[82] A difference in findings arising merely from different inferences drawn from the same testimony, documentary or otherwise, as to which the referee had no superior opportunities of observation over the trial justice, will be resolved by the reviewing court in favor of the latter in the absence of clear error in his findings.[83]

b. Independent Findings of Court

Facts found by the court before the submission or after the report have not the same conclusiveness as those which are concurred in but have that to which fact findings generally are entitled.

Fact issues not submitted, but determined by the trial judge prior to submission, are not findings on which the referee and the court concur and may be reviewed under the same circumstances as any other finding of a trial justice,[84] and further, or additional, findings by the judge stand on the same footing, on review, as the approved findings of the referee.[85]

Inferences from facts found

(1) Although trial court and reviewing court may draw further inferences from facts reported by master to whom case is referred, neither may draw inferences of fact in contradiction of those found by master unless it has before it as a foundation all that was before master, or unless subsidiary facts are so inconsistent with ultimate findings that both cannot stand.

5. Dismissal, Nonsuit, Direction of Verdict, or Demurrer to Evidence

§ 1671. Dismissal or Nonsuit, or Direction of Verdict

a. Motions to direct verdict or for nonsuit in general
b. Both parties moving for directed verdict
c. Dismissal

a. Motions to Direct Verdict or for Nonsuit in General

The action of the trial court in granting or refusing to grant a motion for a directed verdict or for a nonsuit is subject to appellate review, but only to the extent of determining whether there was adduced any evidence legally sufficient to support a conclusion contrary to that reached by the trial court.

Although there may be an appellate review of a ruling or order of the trial court on a motion for a directed verdict or for a nonsuit in the sense that the appellate court may determine whether such action was justified by the legal inferences to be deduced from the undisputed evidence, nevertheless the appellate court will not weigh the evidence, but will confine itself, when the action of the court below is questioned, to a determination of the question whether there is any evidence fairly tending to support a conclusion opposed to that involved in the action of the trial court.[86]

Some weight to be given to conclusion of trial court

On appeal from a judgment for plaintiff where defendant contended that the trial court should have directed a verdict for defendant, it was held that the reviewing court was justified in giving some weight to the conclusion of the trial court that the evidence was sufficient.

Iowa.—Halligan v. Lone Tree Farmers Exchange, 300 N.W. 551, 230 Iowa 1277.

Weighing of evidence by trial court

Judgment granting motion of defendant for directed verdict would not be sustained merely because on weighing the evidence it might be found to support verdict and judgment for defendant, since trial court did not weigh evidence except in so far as it was necessary to determine whether it raised a factual issue as to which reasonable minds could not differ.

Reversal only for abuse of discretion

In case tried before jury wherein trial judge sits as a chancellor, with respect to direction of verdict, supreme court will not reverse unless it finds that trial judge has abused his discretion.

Pa.—Kish v. Bakaysa, 199 A. 321, 330 Pa. 533.

Error apparent from party's own evidence

If it appears by plaintiff's own evidence, when he rests his case, that it is the duty of the court to nonsuit him, a refusal to nonsuit may be corrected by a writ of error.

N.J.—New Jersey Express Co. v. Nichols, 33 N.J.Law 434, 97 Am.D. 722.

Obvious error

Error in directing a verdict is apparent from the abstract, where it shows substantial evidence in favor of appellant's cause of action.

Ark.—Williams v. Agee, 280 S.W. 635, 170 Ark. 670.

Time for taking nonsuit

Where there was a sharp dispute between counsel as to whether case was finally closed and submitted to trial judge for decision, trial judge was in a far better position to decide dispute than appellate court and would be presumed to know if and when plaintiff's counsel had cut himself off from his right to a nonsuit.

Palpably improbable testimony

In considering the principles applicable to directed verdicts, appellate courts may disregard as impossible that palpably improbable testimony, and treat it as no evidence, tion whether the evidence which favors the latter, with the legitimate inferences therefrom, fairly tends to support his contention[90] and excluding from its consideration all evidence or inferences in conflict therewith or unfavorable to him.[91] It has been held that on review of an order made on a but before such testimony may be disregarded, the palpable untruthfulness must appear to be inherent in rejected testimony, so that it contradicts itself, or is irreconcilable with facts of which court takes judicial knowledge, or obviously inconsistent with, and contradicted by, undisputed physical facts.

Tenn.—McMahan v. Tucker, 216 S.W. 2d 356, 31 Tenn.App. 429.

Physical fact doctrine

Evidence or contentions conflicting with well-known physical laws do not impress the appellate court, and will be given little, if any, weight, in considering a claim that verdict was improperly directed.

Ky.—Cochran's Adm'rs v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 22 S.W.2d 452, 232 Ky. 107.

Jury's answer to special question asked by trial judge before recording jury's verdict must be treated as part of verdict, and the facts established by such answer must be considered in determining correctness of judge's ruling entering a verdict contrary to that returned by jury.

Time of motion determinative

If defendant, having offered an affirmative defense, successfully moves for a directed verdict at close of plaintiff's evidence, the appellate court must give effect to evidence most favorable to plaintiff, but where the motion comes at close of the evidence, the appellate court on defendant's appeal may consider all the evidence in determining plaintiff's right to recover.

Failure of plaintiff to introduce rebuttal testimony

Where at close of plaintiff's case defendant's motion for peremptory instruction was denied and thereupon defendant introduced several witnesses following which trial court indicated it would grant instruction, and plaintiff did not introduce rebuttal testimony, and instruction was given, appeal would be decided on evidence as it stood when instruction was given.

b. Both Parties Moving for Directed Verdict

In some jurisdiction if each party moves for a directed verdict and a verdict is directed for one it has the same effect and will be reviewed in the same manner as a jury verdict; but in other jurisdictions if a verdict is directed for one party after both have moved for directed verdicts the effect is generally the same as though only the successful party had made the motion.

A number of jurisdictions follow the rule set out in Trial § 256 b (1) to the effect that unconditional motions by both sides for directed verdicts waive a jury and submit the case to the court, provided there is no action by either party inconsistent with such waiver. In those jurisdictions which follow the theory of waiver, the court's decision stands on the same footing as a jury verdict and is in general conclusive on both parties where supported by, and not clearly against the weight of, the evidence;[92] and the reviewing court is limited to a Decision against preponderance of evidence

The court's decision on facts, after a motion by both parties for a directed verdict, is reviewable as in an equity case, and may be reversed if against the weight of evidence.

N.Y.—Karpas v. Bandler, 228 N.Y.S. 241, 223 App.Div. 306.

consideration of the law and will accept, without review, the determination of the trial court as to the facts, unless it is without any substantial support.[93]

The rule of waiver is not universally followed, and, as stated in Trial § 256 b (2), in a number of jurisdictions motions by both parties for directed verdicts do not, in themselves, waive a jury trial; and in such jurisdictions if there are motions by both parties for directed verdicts and the trial court determines that a verdict should be directed, finality does not attach to this determination, and the action of the court in directing a verdict is to be examined and disposed of just as if the successful party alone had moved the court to direct,[94] unless the conduct and circumstances in addition to the cross motions are sufficient to disclose an intention to submit the whole case to the court.[95]

c. Dismissal

On review of an order on motion to dismiss a cause, the same rules apply as on review of an order on motion for a directed verdict or for nonsuit.

As a general rule, error cannot be assigned on the action of the trial court in dismissing or refusing to dismiss a cause,[96] unless the decision clearly appears

Evidence authorizing verdict for either party

If from the testimony the jury might have found the verdict for plaintiff or for defendant, where both parties request an instructed verdict, a finding of the trial court in favor of one or the other will not be disturbed.
Idaho.—Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 237 P. 281, 41 Idaho 4.

Issues unduly restricted by court

The rule that if there is any evidence to sustain a verdict, directed after motion by both parties, it cannot be assailed as a finding of fact, is not applicable, where the court has improperly restricted the issues as to the party against whom the verdict is directed by compelling him to elect between defenses set up in his answer.
Or.—Fletcher v. Yates, 211 P. 179, 105 Or. 680.

Striking evidence, motion granted after

The rule that a judgment on a directed verdict, where both parties moved for such verdict, cannot be disturbed if supported by any evidence does not apply, where the court struck out all of defendant's evidence after defendant made his motion for directed verdict.
Mont.—McCaull-Dinsmore Co. v. Stevens, 194 P. 213, 59 Mont. 206.

Submission of special question to jury

Where both sides moved for a directed verdict, but both acquiesced in submission of special questions to the jury, and verdict on one of questions was against the weight of the evidence, judgment on a directed verdict for defendant was subject to reversal.

to be erroneous,[97] in which case it may review and reverse.[98]

The same rules with respect to the evidence which will be considered and the manner of its consideration as have been stated in connection with the grant or refusal of directed verdicts or nonsuits apply where the motion granted or refused was one to dismiss.[99] If, however, a case is tried before one judge and thereafter a different judge sets aside the verdict and dismisses the case, the action of the judge in setting aside the verdict and dismissing the case will not be sustained unless it is fully supported by the record, [99.5] since he is not aided by having heard the trial and observed the demeanor of the witnesses.[99.10]

In at least one jurisdiction, on appellate review of an equity case which has been disposed of by sustaining defendant's motion to dismiss at the conclusion of plaintiff's case, and where the court has made no findings with respect to the truth of the evidence, but has simply declared as a matter of law that, assuming plaintiff's evidence to be true, such evidence has no substantial value as tending to support the issues tendered, the appellate court will not confine itself to the law question thus presented but will look behind the trial court ruling and will review the case on its merits without regard to the course actually taken in the trial court.[99.15] Furthermore, the same course will be followed by the appellate court where the case was disposed of by granting defendant's motion to dismiss made at the conclusion of plaintiff's case, even though defendant's motion was not granted until after defendant had presented his case to the trial court.[99.20]

On review of an order made on motion to dismiss at the conclusion of the presentation of plaintiff's case where the motion is not acted on until after defendant's case has been presented, it has been held that only the evidence that was before the court when the motion was made will be considered, and evidence introduced by defendant will not be considered.[99.25] However, it has also been held that where the court reserves decision on a motion to dismiss at the conclusion of the presentation of plaintiff's case, and defendant then proceeds with the defense, the question raised by the motion to dismiss should be decided on a consideration of the entire record.[99.30]

§ 1672. Demurrer to Evidence

On review of an order or ruling on a demurrer to the evidence the only question for the appellate court to determine is whether there is any substantial evidence which tends to establish the issues, and in making this determination the court will consider the evidence in its aspect least favorable to the party demurring.

On review of an order or ruling of the trial court on a demurrer to the evidence, the appellate court is governed by the same principles as those which apply to a judgment on verdicts or findings of a

All testimony considered

On review of a demurrer to the evidence the appellate court considers the entire testimony of a witness and not some isolated statement, and if this were not true plaintiff might recover on testimony in chief, although on cross-examination he admitted he was in error.

Defendant's evidence considered

Where defendant did not stand on demurrer after it was overruled, but proceeded to introduce evidence, the appellate court would not consider the sufficiency of plaintiff's evidence alone.

Instruction in nature of demurrer to evidence

In determining whether an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence should have been given, the appellate court is required to take plaintiff's evidence as true and to disregard defendant's evidence which conflicts with plaintiff's evidence, to give plaintiff benefit of all reasonable and legitimate inferences arising from all evidence and also benefit of all testimony given by defendant which tends to support plaintiff's case, and to give plaintiff benefit of all reasonable inferences deducible from facts and circumstances tending to support his theory of case.

Common reason not to be disregarded

In reviewing ruling for defendant on demurrer to plaintiff's testimony, although court must view plaintiff's evidence and all reasonable inferences therefrom favorably to plaintiff and disregard evidence unfavorable to plaintiff, court need not disregard common reason and accept as true what cannot be true under circumstances, or give plaintiff benefit of any other than reasonable inferences.

but will be reviewed and set aside where there is such evidence,[8] unless it has been held, there is no right to a jury trial.[9]

Motion to strike evidence. After the parties have introduced all available evidence and the trial court has sustained a motion to strike plaintiff's evidence, on review the appellate court will examine the evidence to determine whether or not a verdict on behalf of the losing party can be sustained, and if the court is of the opinion that reasonable men may differ on the conclusion to be reached, it is the duty of the court to hold that the trial court committed error in striking the evidence.[9.5] In determining whether the motion to strike should be sustained, the reviewing court will not view the evidence as strictly as on a demurrer, but appellants will be given the benefit of all substantial conflict in the evidence and all fair inferences which may be drawn from the evidence.[9.10] Where defendant's motion to strike plaintiff's evidence is granted without defendant having introduced any evidence, on review the only question presented in whether the evidence submitted presented a question of fact for determination by the jury or a question of law to be determined by the court.[9.15]

6. Decision on Motion for New Trial

§ 1673. Grant of Motion

a. In general
b. Grounds of order

a. In General

A decision by the trial court to grant a motion for a new trial generally is made only after there has been a determination of questions of fact, and the decision of the trial court is usually sustained on review unless error of law is shown to exist.

While an appellate court may have the power to overrule the trial court on questions of fact involving the granting of a new trial,[9.50] it is not the province of an appellate court to substitute its judgment for that of the trier of facts on the review of an order granting a new trial.[9.55] Accordingly, an order granting a motion for new trial, where the order is based on questions of fact, ordinarily will not be disturbed on review,[10] unless it is apparent

Equity cases

(1) In equity cases in which issues of fact are tried by the court, judgment for defendant on demurrer to plaintiff's testimony will not, according to some authorities, be reversed on appeal, unless against clear weight of the evidence.

Okl.—Connolly v. Gaffaney, 14 P.2d 391, 159 Okl. 60—Rowsey v. Witcher, 270 P. 850, 133 Okl. 17—Heldt v. Heldt, 246 P. 608, 118 Okl. 103—Penny v. Vose, 234 P. 601, 108 Okl. 103.

(2) Elsewhere, however, it has been held that the rule that, if there is some evidence tending to support plaintiff's case, a demurrer to the evidence should not be sustained, does not apply in a suit in equity, as far as concerns the extent of review on appeal; but, as a demurrer to evidence is not proper in equity, the sustaining of it amounts only to a judgment that plaintiff has not sustained the allegations of his petition, and the appellate court will examine the record and will determine whether the judgment of the lower court was proper.

Conflicting evidence

(1) All presumptions are in favor of an order granting a new trial as against the verdict, and such an order granted on the ground of insufficiency of evidence must be sustained if there is an appreciable conflict in the evidence.
Cal.—Parker v. Brown, 57 P.2d 183, 13 C.A.2d 501.

Cal.—Parker v. Brown, supra.

but the appellate court is not absolutely bound by the ruling of the trial court.[17.5] Accordingly, if the trial judge in granting a motion for a new trial failed to consider all the material evidence which tended to support the verdict, or misconceived the evidence, his decision to grant a new trial would be lacking in persuasive force,[17.10] and the appellate court may make an independent examination of the evidence to determine whether it preponderates against the verdict,[17.15] and may decline to sustain the ruling of the trial court.[17.20] Where the verdict rendered was correct as a matter of law, the grant of a new trial may be reviewed and revised.[18]

It has been declared that in reviewing an order granting the motion, the appellate court indulges in the same presumption in favor of the ruling as when the motion is denied;[19] while elsewhere it has been stated that even greater weight is to be accorded an order setting aside the verdict and for a new trial than to a refusal of the motion.[20]

It is stated in New Trial § 66 b that the fact that a verdict is self-contradictory, or that it is inconsistent with another verdict, or that special findings are inconsistent with each other or with the general verdict, may be ground for a new trial, and, accordingly, where a new trial is awarded on such a ground the decision of the trial court will not usually be disturbed on review.[20.5]

Under statutes so providing, the trial court may set aside a verdict and grant a new trial because the verdict or decision is "against law," or "contrary to law," as stated in New Trial § 68, but an order granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict was "against law" cannot be sustained by merely showing that it was unsupported by the evidence,[20.10] and it cannot be sustained where no error is shown in the determination of any question of fact.[20.15] support the verdict or finding will be sustained on review unless the determination is without any reasonable basis.

Ordinarily, an appellate court does not disturb an order of the trial court granting a motion for a new trial because of insufficiency of evidence, or because the verdict or finding is against the weight of the evidence,[20.50] and particularly where the verdict or finding is palpably against the weight of the evidence,[21] or the proved physical facts,[22] or is without any substantial or sufficient evidentiary support.[23]

Except in equity cases, appellate courts cannot interfere with action of trial court in granting a motion for new trial on ground of failure of evidence, if there is shown any substantial evidence.
Mo.—Seymour v. Tobin Quarries, 123 S.W.2d 628, 233 Mo.App. 573.

Evidence to justify submission
In determining whether trial court properly exercised its discretion in awarding new trial on ground that verdict was against weight of evidence, a discretionary ground, appellate court must examine record to ascertain if there was sufficient substantial evidence to justify submission of plaintiff's case to jury.

manifestly demanded by the evidence;[26] where the evidence merely preponderates in favor of the verdict which was rendered;[26.5] or where the evidence on which the verdict or judgment was based was conflicting.[27] An order granting a new trial will be allowed to stand unless the evidence is clearly,

4 C.J. p 905 note 34.

The allowance of a motion for a new trial on the weight of the evidence is peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court, as discussed in New Trial § 201 b (5); and a ruling by the trial court granting a new trial because of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict is not subject to review except where there has been an abuse or withholding of discretion.[30] The fact that the reviewing court might or would have ruled differently is not a sufficient circumstance to induce it to set aside the order or restore the verdict.[31]

A trial court has the right and power to grant a new trial in the interest of justice, and it is the duty of the trial court to do so when the ends of justice have not been served as discussed in New Trial § 202; and if it appears to the trial judge that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence and that the interests of justice would be promoted by a new trial, his determination will not be disturbed,[31.5] but will be deemed conclusive on appeal.[31.10]

However, a grant of the motion by the trial court is not conclusive against an exercise by the appellate court of the right to review,[32] except, perhaps, where the evidence is such that different inferences may reasonably be drawn from it.[32.5] An order or ruling granting a new trial because of insufficiency of evidence may be reviewed and reversed where the verdict is clearly supported by the evidence,[33] particularly if, in addition, there is no substantial conflict in the evidence,[33.5] or if it does not affirmatively appear that the trial court granted the new trial in the exercise of its discretion.[34] Such an order or ruling may be reviewed and reversed where there is no substantial evidence in the record to support a verdict for the party awarded a new trial;[35] where it can be said as a matter of law that there is no substantial evidence to support a different judgment or verdict;[35.5] where the evidence is such that no verdict in favor of the party to whom a new trial was granted could be allowed to stand;[35.10] where a verdict the opposite of that returned should have been directed;[35.15] where the determination of the trial judge is clearly wrong;[36] and where the verdict was well supported and the grounds on which the court set it aside are merely conjectural,[37] or are merely based on inferences from the testimony on which the jury and the appellate court are as well qualified to pass as is the trial justice.[38] A grant of a new trial for the insufficiency of the evidence as a matter of law is not sustainable when there is evidence in the case which tends to support the verdict.[39]

In Virginia, the rule is opposed to that prevailing generally and if there is evidence not physically impossible or inherently incredible which if credited by the jury is sufficient to support the verdict, an order of the trial court setting such verdict aside and granting a new trial is to be reversed.[40] While weight is to be accorded to the determination of the trial judge,[41] it is nevertheless the privilege and the duty of the reviewing court to examine the evidence to see whether it is capable of sustaining the verdict and, if it is, to set aside the order.[42]

(b) After Grant or Refusal of Directed Verdict

If a new trial was granted because of error in directing or refusing to direct a verdict, the question on appellate review is whether there was legally sufficient evidence to support a verdict for the party against whom the motion was directed, and the evidence will be reviewed only in so far as is required to resolve that question.

Where the verdict set aside on a motion for a new trial is one which was entered pursuant to a direction by the court, the order allowing the new trial will be sustained if there is any evidence to uphold a verdict for the movant; if not, the order will be

Credible evidence considered

Defendants, who on first trial obtained a verdict, which was set aside by trial court, were entitled on writ of error to have credible evidence considered in light favorable to them, and, if it was sufficient to support the verdict, all adverse evidence could be disregarded.

Trial judge not a juror

"It is not sufficient that the judge, if on the jury, would have rendered a different verdict. It is not sufficient that there is a great preponderance of the evidence against it. If there is a conflict of the testimony on a material point, or if reasonably fair-minded men may differ as to the conclusions of fact to be drawn from the evidence, or if the conclusion is dependent on the weight to be given the testimony, in all such cases the verdict of the jury is final and conclusive and cannot be disturbed either by the trial court, or by this court, or if improperly set aside by the trial court, it will be reinstated by this court."

set aside and the verdict reinstated.[43] In such a situation, the evidence favoring the party against whom the verdict was originally directed, and who has procured the new trial, must be taken as true.[44]

Where a motion for a directed verdict has been refused and a new trial is granted on the ground that such refusal was legally erroneous, the question presented on appeal is whether there was evidence sufficient to warrant submission to the jury, and, if not, the order granting the new trial will be sustained.[45] Where the trial court granted a new trial on the ground that it had erred in not directing a verdict, if the record does not clearly show that the motion for a directed verdict was properly denied the order granting a new trial will be affirmed.[45.5]

(2) Conduct of Counsel, Court, or Jury

If a new trial has been granted because of misconduct of jury, counsel, or the court, the trial court ruling will usually be sustained if it has evidentiary support; but if the misconduct is established, the effect of it may be a question of law for the appellate court to determine finally.

On appeal from an order granting a motion for a new trial because of misconduct of the jury, the weight of the testimony taken at the hearing of the motion is for the trial court.[45.50] Accordingly, new trial granted on the ground of misconduct of jurors will not be disturbed where the evidence of misconduct, on which the motion was based, is conflicting;[46] and this is true although it preponderates against the ruling, in view of the trial judge's opportunity to observe the jury and discover at first-hand the facts as to the misconduct.[47]

The rule has been applied in a variety of situations, including cases involving quotient verdicts,[48] intoxication of a juror,[49] communication by a juror with an attorney for one of the parties,[49.5] and the examination of objects or articles not introduced in evidence.[50]

Where a clearly erroneous verdict has resulted, but whether from improper argument of counsel or from misconduct of the jury is not clear, there being circumstances in support of each view, the determination of the cause of the error is for the trial judge and not for the appellate court on review.[51]

On the other hand, if misconduct of a juror has been established, the question of whether the misconduct did or did not affect the verdict is one of law for the reviewing court to decide.[51.5]

Error of court. The action of the court in granting a new trial on the ground that its own remarks in the course of the trial were improperly prejudicial will not be disturbed where they might perhaps have had such a tendency, depending on the manner and circumstances of utterance;[52] and an order to that effect, on the ground that the court gave additional instructions when counsel were absent, will not be set aside where there is clear testimony that such instructions were given and an absence of testimony

Verdict defective in form
Assuming that the court in construing a verdict might look beyond pleadings and consider the undisputed evidence, a verdict for plaintiff in garnishment proceedings, insufficient for failure to establish the specific amount subject to garnishment, was not aided by the fact that the jury was instructed that, if it found the plaintiff's contentions to be true, it should render its verdict in the form and manner which it did, where evidence introduced was not specified nor any attempt made to have it brought up as part of record, and the action of the court in setting aside such defective verdict will not be reviewed on appeal.

to the contrary.[53] Ordinarily, an order of the trial judge granting a new trial because of an erroneous instruction to the jury will be affirmed,[53.5] and if an error in instructions could have been prejudicial, the decision of the trial judge to grant a new trial because the jury may have been misled by the instructions is final.[53.10] Where a new trial is granted by the trial judge on the ground of an erroneous exclusion of evidence, his determination will not be reviewed on appeal where the trial court was in a better position than the appellate court to determine the propriety and probable effect of the exclusion.[54]

It is not sufficient to induce the appellate court to set aside the grant of the new trial that, had the trial judge refused to grant it, his refusal would not have been reversed.[55]

(3) Newly Discovered Evidence

If the trial court determines that there is newly discovered evidence which warrants the grant of a new trial, an order granting the new trial on this ground usually will be sustained on appeal if there is evidence supporting the determination of the trial court.

Ordinarily, an appellate court will not disturb an order granting a motion for a new trial where the trial court has made the order after a determination of a question of fact, as, that there is newly discovered evidence,[56] that there has been no want of diligence in failing to discover it at an earlier stage in the trial,[57] that the newly discovered evidence is reasonably likely to change the result,[58] and that justice requires that a new trial should be granted.[58.5] The order granting the new trial will not be disturbed where the affidavits are in conflict,[59] or where there is room for a reasonable doubt;[60] and, a fortiori, where the preponderance of the evidence supports the conclusion of the trial court, the order granting the new trial will not be disturbed.[61]

The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a judgment for the movant is not before the court on appeal from an order granting a new trial for newly discovered evidence;[62] nor is the weight or credibility of the new evidence.[63] It is, however, the duty of the appellate court to determine as a matter of law whether the evidence on which the trial judge based his findings is such that those findings can reasonably be made.[63.5]

(4) Amount of Recovery

On appeal from an order granting a new trial because of excessive or inadequate damages, the trial court ruling ordinarily will not be disturbed if there is some basis for the order and it is not manifestly erroneous.

An appellate court may reverse an order granting a new trial because of the amount of the verdict,[63.50] but if a motion for a new trial because of excessive or inadequate damages is granted, the action of the trial court is entitled to great weight in an appellate court;[63.52] and an appellate court will not set aside the order unless it appears that the decision of the trial court is manifestly erroneous,[63.54]

or unless it appears that the trial judge has overlooked or misconceived some vital evidence, or has applied a wrong rule of law thereto.[63.56] Thus, an order granting a new trial because of an excessive verdict will be sustained unless all the evidence shows that that there was no substantial basis for the order.[63.58] If an order is made granting a new trial on several grounds and one ground is that the damages are excessive, the order will be affirmed on review if it is sufficient on that ground alone.[63.60]

Ordinarily, an appellate court will not disturb an order granting a new trial because of inadequacy of the verdict,[63.62] and such an order will be affirmed if supported by substantial evidence,[63.64] as, where it appears that the amount awarded was manifestly inadequate,[63.66] or that the jury had overlooked substantial elements of damage,[63.68] or had capriciously rejected uncontradicted testimony,[63.70] or that some improper motive had entered into the verdict rendered.[63.72] If the sole ground for granting a new trial is the inadequacy of the verdict, the appellate court will review the order, particularly where the review does not involve a consideration of the evidence.[63.74]

Under some statutory provisions the appellate court will review de novo the judgment exercised or the action taken by a trial court in reducing or increasing a jury verdict as an alternative to a new trial,[63.76] and on such de novo review the appellate court will reverse or affirm the trial court order, dependent on whether or not a majority of the reviewing court believes the jury verdict unmistakably must have been the result of passion or prejudice.[63.78]

§ 1674. Denial of Motion

A ruling by the trial court denying a motion for a new trial is entitled to great weight and ordinarily it will not be disturbed if it has evidentiary support; but the ruling will be reviewed and reversed if it is clearly wrong.

On review of an order denying a motion for a new trial the ruling of the trial court is entitled to great weight[64] and will not ordinarily be dis-

Excessive verdict resulting from passion and prejudice

Where new trial has been granted because of excessive verdict and conclusion of trial judge is that excessive verdict was result of passion and prejudice, appellate court will not disturb the trial court ruling because record does not disclose jury's bias since decision of trial court may be based on matters which occurred at trial but which cannot be preserved in record.

Newspaper reports of trial

A party is not entitled to a new trial refused him by the trial court merely because of fair newspaper accounts of the progress of the trial and contentions of the parties, where no complaint was made until after verdict, and the trial court found that no prejudice had resulted.

ground for the new trial was jury misconduct[67.5] or newly discovered evidence.[67.10] Under some rules of civil procedure, if a new trial is sought on the ground that the verdict is so against the weight of the evidence as to be manifestly unjust and clearly wrong, the appellate court will consider and weigh all the evidence in the case, and may remand the case for a new trial even though the record contains some evidence of probative force in support of the verdict.[67.15]

The fact that there is a serious conflict in the evidence[68] or even that the reviewing court might have reached a different conclusion[69] furnishes no ground for setting aside the order of the trial court; nor does the circumstance that the greater number of witnesses appeared for the party against whom verdict was rendered and judgment entered.[70] The fact findings on such motions are given the same effect on appeal as other findings or fact determinations by the court;[71] and the determination can be set aside only on the same grounds as a jury verdict on issues of fact might be.[72]

Refusal of a motion asserting the verdict to be against the weight of, or not sustained by, the evidence will not be disturbed where there was evidence legally sufficient to support the verdict or judgment;[73] where there was a conflict in the evi-

Qualification of rule

To make applicable the general rule that an order denying a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict will not be reversed where the evidence is conflicting and there is some evidence to support the verdict, the conflict must be real, and the supporting evidence substantial.

Denial of unconditional new trial

Where jury's verdict for plaintiff and trial justice's decision granting defendant's motion for new trial, unless plaintiff remitted all of verdict in excess of stated sum, were supported by competent evidence, when read as whole and in light of trial justice's unequivocal adverse evaluation of defendant's credibility, appellate court cannot say that trial justice clearly erred in denying defendant's motion for unconditional new trial.

Default judgment

Refusal of new trial in a default judgment case should not be disturbed on appeal unless defendant has shown trial judge a good excuse for his failure to appear and defend suit.

Question of fact subject to appellate review

"The rule under the statute and now under Rule 327, is that a question of whether or not jury misconduct actually occurred is a question officials or attendants,[85] or the trial judge himself,[86] or on the ground of excess, inadequacy, or other error in the damages or relief awarded,[87] or on the ground of surprise or mistake developed in the progress of the trial,[88] or of newly discovered evidence,[89] its denial by the trial justice will stand when there is a conflict in the evidence submitted in support of, and in opposition to, the motion,[90] where of fact to be determined by the trial court subject to review by an appellate court in the same manner as any other question of fact."

Tex.—Tumlinson v. San Antonio Brewing Ass'n, Civ.App., 170 S.W. 2d 620, 623, error refused.

Review in appellate court

When misconduct of the jury is alleged as a ground for a new trial, even though the evidence as to such misconduct is in conflict, the finding of the trial court thereon is subject to review by the appellate court.

Statutory provisions

Where, on a motion for new trial, the affidavits of some jurors would show that the verdict was arrived at by chance, and the affidavits by others denied such, the finding of the court sustaining the verdict will not be disturbed, despite the provisions of a statute that misconduct might be established by one juror.

opposed to the finding is clear and convincing,[93] unless the conclusion of the trial court was plainly wrong,[94] or unless the ruling is contrary to the clear preponderance of evidence.[95]

However, the appellate court, while reluctant to set aside an order refusing a new trial,[96] will do so where the verdict and judgment are clearly against the weight of the evidence[97] or are without support in the evidence,[98] where the order is based on inferences from facts on which the reviewing court is as well able to pass as is the trial judge,[99] where newly discovered evidence is made to appear which is conclusive against the judgment entered,[1] where affidavits of misconduct by the jurors are uncontroverted,[2] or where the trial judge has acted in a manner manifestly erroneous in point of law.[3]

Inadequacy of relief

Iowa.—De Moss v. Brown Cab Co., 254 N.W. 17, 218 Iowa 154.

Independent examination on review

Where trial judge found that verdict was not supported by the evidence and that verdict was motivated by passion, yet denied defendant's motion for new trial, it was duty of appellate court to examine the evidence independently.

Tex.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Garrison, Com.App., 45 S.W.2d 185.

Where evidence is such that the trial court should have directed a verdict for the party moving for a new trial in accordance with his request therefor, a refusal of a motion to set aside a verdict against him and for a new trial is error;[4] and, conversely, an order refusing to set aside a directed verdict and grant a new trial cannot be sustained on appeal if there is any evidence from which a jury could reasonably have found for the movant.[5] It has also been held that an order denying a new trial cannot be sustained on appeal in the absence of sufficient findings of fact, even though the evidence as certified to the appellate court would have fully warranted the findings.[5.5]

Where a new trial is sought under the provisions of a statute authorizing a new trial if the reporter's transcript becomes unavailable, it is for the trial court to determine such questions of fact as will entitle the moving party to a new trial on this ground; and, ordinarily, if the trial court determines questions of fact adversely to the moving party and, accordingly, denies the new trial, the determination by the trial court will not be disturbed on review.[5.10]

Misconduct of a juror or jurors warrants a new trial only where the verdict was, or probably was, influenced thereby to the prejudice of the complaining party, as discussed in New Trial § 61. Where jury misconduct has been established, it is a question of law whether the misconduct did or did not have a prejudicial effect on the verdict, and a determination by the trial court on this question is not binding on the reviewing court.[5.15] The reviewing court will make an independent determination of this question,[6] and, if the doctrine of reasonable doubt is applied, the reviewing court will reverse the judgment of the trial court denying a new trial unless it was shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the jury misconduct did not affect or influence the verdict.[7] In at least one jurisdiction the doctrine of reasonable doubt has been abolished by a rule of civil procedure,[7.5] and under such rule a person asserting misconduct of a juror or jurors as ground for a new trial has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the established misconduct probably resulted in injury to him.[7.10] If it is established to the satisfaction of the reviewing

"Under Rule 327, R.C.P. the question of the materiality of this misconduct shown (i. e., its tendency toward prejudice), as well as the question of whether or not it reasonably appears that injury probably resulted to the complaining party, is a question of law. It seems that the question of probable injury includes that of materiality so that in effect but one question is involved, that of probable injury, which is first determined by the trial court, and then on appeal by the appellate court as a question of law, independently of the trial court's holding."

court that the jury misconduct was not prejudicial, the judgment of the trial court denying the new trial will be sustained;[7.15] but if the reviewing court determines that the jury misconduct was prejudicial, the order of the trial court denying the new trial will be reversed.[7.20]

7. Refusal to Find Facts

§ 1675. When Reviewable

No question is presented for appellate review by the refusal of the trial court to find incidental or evidentiary facts, and an appellate court will review only if the trial court has refused to find ultimate facts as to which the evidence is uncontroverted and the inferences are all only one way.

Because a trial court is only required to find ultimate facts, the refusal to find facts merely incidental or evidentiary does not present a question for appellate review.[8]

A refusal by the trial court to find a proposed fact is not reviewable where there is conflict in the evidence, and it cannot be said that the inferences are not all one way, or that an opinion to the contrary might not lawfully be formed;[9] nor will such refusal be disturbed on appeal, although defendant's testimony on which the finding was requested was apparently not directly contradicted inasmuch as determination of the witness' credibility is the trial court's exclusive province.[10]

In order for refusal of findings to be error available on appeal, the facts as to which the request is made must be established by admitted or undisputed proof,[11] and the inferences must all be only one way,[11.5] and where the facts are thus established, a refusal to make a finding may present a question reviewable in the appellate court;[12] but if an appellate court declines to reverse for error because of the refusal of the trial court to make a finding where the facts are undisputed and the inferences are only one way, the appellate court may and should supply the finding.[12.5]

Where the triers of the facts refuse to find facts in favor of the party having the burden of proof, the question on review is not whether competent evidence would sustain such finding if made, but whether there was a capricious disregard of competent evidence in the refusal so to find.[12.10]

1. General Rules

§ 1676. Review Dependent on Prejudice to Rights of Party in General

It is a fundamental principle of appellate procedure which is universally recognized and applied that a party cannot assign as error that which is not prejudicial to him; and harmless error, that is error unaccompanied by prejudice or injury, is not ground for reversal.

In the interest of the orderly administration of justice and for the avoidance of useless expense to litigants,[12.50] it is a fundamental principle of appelcial,[14.5] not all errors are necessarily prejudicial,[14.10] and to constitute reversible error there must be a concurrence of both error and injury or prejudice therefrom.[14.15] In fact, "reversible error" has been defined as error materially affecting the merits of the action, and as excluding the consideration of any error or defect not affecting the substantial rights of the complaining party.[14.20]

The reviewing court must disregard error, in every stage of the action, which does not affect the substantial rights of the party complaining.[15]

Relaxation of common-law rules

While object of judicial procedure is to safeguard meticulously the fair trial of litigants' rights, as to error which is harmless, the adoption of harmless error statute has relaxed rigid rules of ancient common law to prevent reversal therefor.

Interpretation of court rule

Reviewing court will seldom disturb interpretation of a rule as made by a member of court which promulgated it unless and until it affirmatively appears that a party has been prejudiced by failure to observe the rule.

Nature of right affected

N.Y.—Schaffer Stores Co. v. Teti, 104 N.Y.S.2d 231, 278 App.Div. 832.

Failure of appellee to assert lack of prejudice

The mere fact that appellee failed to contend that the record did not present reversible error in the exclusion of testimony, because it failed to show what the testimony would have been or what was lost to appellant, did not relieve the court on appeal from considering whether the error was nonprejudicial, since the law raises the point.

pellant is always a proper question for consideration on appeal;[16.5] and the appellate court may, and is required to, examine the record as a whole and determine therefrom whether any procedural errors probably resulted in an erroneous and prejudicial judgment.[16.10] Thus, the appellate courts have inherent power to decide that an error was of that character and to refuse to disturb a judgment because of it when they believe that a proper judgment has been rendered.[17]

Where the judgment is clearly correct on the merits, intervening errors will not operate to reverse the judgment.[18] Thus, the fact that an ac-

Tex.—Loyd v. Herrington, Civ.App., 178 S.W.2d 694, reversed on other grounds 182 S.W.2d 1003, 143 Tex. 135—Bruyere v. Liberty Nat. Bank of Waco, Civ.App., 262 S.W. 844.

Various factors stated

In determining whether error was probably harmless or probably prejudicial, an appellate court is guided by all factors in case bearing on likelihood of prejudice, force of evidence to sustain verdict, assumption that jury were intelligent, and where verdict is sustainable on more than one theory, that verdict is based on theory unaffected by error, where nothing in case suggests the contrary.

S.D.—Allen v. McLain, 69 N.W.2d 390, 75 S.D. 520.

Length of trial as factor

Questionable ruling in a long trial is rarely held so harmful as to constitute, of itself, reversible error.

Conn.—H. O. Canfield Co. v. United Const. Workers, 70 A.2d 547, 136 Conn. 293.

Absence of party during second trial

Fact that trial of action against truck driver and owner for death of driver of automobile with which truck collided in the dark at which trial truck driver testified resulted in verdict for defendants, whereas subsequent trial during truck driver's absence because of military service resulted in verdict for plaintiff, was some evidence that refusal to stay proceedings on ground of truck driver's military service was prejudicial to truck driver and owner.

Iowa.—Semler v. Oertwig, 12 N.W.2d 265, 234 Iowa 233.

Cumulative effect of errors

(1) While under some circumstances one error in the trial of a case standing alone, would not be sufficient to work a reversal of the judgment of the trial court, an accumulation of such minor errors may have the effect of creating an improper prejudice against a party to such an extent that the judgment should not be permitted to stand.

Tex.—White Cabs v. Moore, Civ.App., 199 S.W.2d 202, reversed on other grounds 203 S.W.2d 200, 146 Tex. 101.

(2) However, the record did not present such an accumulation of errors as to require a reversal of judgment by the appellate court.

Tex.—Utilities Natural Gas Corp. v. Hill, Civ.App., 239 S.W.2d 431, error refused no reversible error—White Cabs v. Moore, Civ.App., 199 S.W.2d 202, reversed on other grounds 203 S.W.2d 200, 146 Tex. 101.

Weight of evidence; conflicting evidence

(1) Evidence which is very nearly insufficient as a matter of law to sustain the verdict requires reversal for errors otherwise not reversible.

Tex.—Chapman v. Head, Civ.App., 279 S.W. 906.

(2) In close and doubtful cases error is reversible which otherwise would not warrant the setting aside of a verdict.

Ga.—Clough v. Greyhound Corp., 85 S.E.2d 476, 91 Ga.App. 246, reversed on other grounds 87 S.E.2d 387, 211 Ga. 574, conformed to and vacated on other grounds 88 S.E.2d 700, 92 Ga.App. 558.

Ohio.—Book v. Erskine & Sons, 96 N.E.2d 289, 154 Ohio St. 391, 32 A.L.R.2d 1.

(3) Where the reviewing court is in serious doubt as to sufficiency of evidence to support judgment, court must carefully consider errors complained of and order a retrial if such errors probably prejudiced the case of party against whom they were committed.

Cal.—Herbert v. Lankershim, 71 P. 2d 220, 9 C.2d 409.

Belletich v. Pollock, 171 P.2d 57, 75 C.A.2d 142.

(4) The greater number of witnesses or quantity of evidence on one side, or sharp conflict in the evidence, does not mean that a case is "close" so that error which ordinarily might not be prejudicial would become prejudicial.

Cal.—Hatfield v. Levy Bros., 117 P. 2d 841, 18 C.2d 798.

Sheldon v. River Lines, 205 P.2d 37, 91 C.A.2d 478.

(5) Where evidence would sustain a verdict for either party, it is essential to a fair trial that issues be determined by an impartial jury, solely on the evidence in the case, without any appeal to passion or prejudice, and the record should be substantially free from prejudicial error.

Ill.—Keehn v. Braubach, 80 N.E.2d 156, 307 Ill.App. 339.

(6) On the other hand, the fact that the cold record may show that the evidence preponderated in favor of defendants does not foreclose the supreme court's consideration of any error or irregularity committed at the trial.

Mont.—Pilgeram v. Haas, 167 P.2d 339, 118 Mont. 431.

Analysis of issues and evidence required

Only by technique of logical analysis of nature of issues and state of evidence in particular case can harmful or prejudicial effect, if any, of an erroneous ruling of trial court be determined.

No reversal unless improper judgment

An appellate court should not reverse trial court's judgment, unless appellate court is of opinion that error complained of amounted to such a denial of appellant's rights as was reasonably calculated to cause and probably did cause rendition of improper judgment.

Tex.—York v. Glenn, Civ.App., 242 S.W.2d 653.

Judgment held improper

Fact that jury returned a verdict against one of defendants in death action, although there was no evidence of any negligent acts on part of that defendant and although findings of negligence were contrary to the overwhelming weight and preponderance of the evidence, indicated that jury verdict must have been influenced by improper considerations.

Tex.—Plains Creamery v. Denny, Civ. App., 277 S.W.2d 755.

Substantial supporting evidence

Where there is substantial evidence to support verdict, judgment will not be reversed on appeal by reason of errors or defects in proceedings which do not affect substantial rights of parties.

Reasons for rule

(1) The purpose of a review is to correct an erroneous result and not merely to approve or disapprove the grounds on which it is based.

N.M.—State Trust & Savings Bank v. Hermosa Land & Cattle Co., 240 P. 469, 30 N.M. 566.

(2) It is the policy of the law that cases should be tried on the merits, and not on defects in the pleading or violation of rules of evidence.

Particular actions held free of prejudice

(1) That an action for money had and received was commenced before ties offset each other, the judgment must be affirmed,[18.10] although it has also been held that error cannot be set off against error to save a judgment.[18.15]

When the error could not or did not affect the final result it is harmless;[19] and where it could the actual receipt of the money by defendants does not require reversal of a judgment rendered against defendants after they had received the money.

Cal.—Cavanagh v. Shaver, 207 P. 275, 56 C.A. 758.

(2) Assuming that extension of time of payment of a note was binding, and that action by indorser paying the note for contribution against the coindorser was prematurely brought, the coindorser was not prejudiced thereby, where nothing but time was wanting to fix the coindorser's liability, and that had elapsed, and the note had matured under last extension before the cause was tried.
Iowa.—Keefer v. Valentine, 203 N. W. 787, 199 Iowa 1337.

(3) In an action by sureties on a note to subject land mortgaged to them as an indemnity for payment of the debt which they had paid, a defendant, claiming some interest in the land and denying the sureties' right to maintain suit, was not prejudiced by the fact that suit was prematurely brought.
Ky.—McHargue v. Whitaker, 198 S. W. 895, 178 Ky. 169.

(4) Where defendant insurer admitted actual receipt of proofs of loss before a suit was filed, there could be no possible injury to it from premature filing of the suit, where costs were adjudged against plaintiffs.
Tex.—Royal Ins. Co. of Liverpool, England v. Humphrey, Civ.App., 201 S.W. 426.

(5) Although some necessary condition precedent to suit, such as a tender, is omitted, if the court expressly makes the enforcement of the judgment for plaintiff dependent upon the performance of that condition, the error is nonprejudicial and nonreversible.
Wash.—Hardinger v. Hainsworth, 191 P. 755, 111 Wash. 590.

(6) An action on a fire policy will not be remanded for new trial as premature, although the jury's finding that insurer had declined to pay loss was not warranted, where the case was thoroughly tried and justice done.

(7) In action for injunction to remove obstruction of sewage easement, judgment was held not reversible for premature trial where obstruction was causing continuing damage to plaintiff's land and defendant showed no prejudice from prematurity.

No primary negligence

Where contributory negligence is pleaded as an affirmative defense but the verdict of the jury for defendants clearly shows that it is based on a finding that there was no primary negligence on defendant's part, question of contributory negligence loses much of its importance.

Okl.—Boyett v. Airline Lumber Co., 277 P.2d 676.

Collusion, fraud, and perjury

Appellate court would not disturb judgment for defendant insurance company, although errors appeared in record, where there was clear case of collusion, fraud, and perjury on part of plaintiff and individual defendant to aid plaintiff's recovery.

Mistaken belief as to nature of right

Where plaintiff possesses a good cause of action, the fact that he and the court are mistaken as to the basis on which it rests is immaterial, if it is properly and sufficiently made out in any aspect of the case which will sustain the recovery allowed.

Iowa.—Equitable Life Ins. Co. of Iowa v. Brown, 262 N.W. 124, 220 Iowa 585.

N.J.—Blanos v. Eastwood Realty Co., 181 A. 144, 116 N.J.Law 1.

Relief as broad as prayer

(1) Plaintiff cannot be heard to complain of error of law, if any, where relief granted is in accordance with prayer of his bill.

Md.—Lynch v. Kamanitz, 129 A. 862, 148 Md. 381.

(2) Where plaintiff obtained a verdict for the full amount of claims submitted to the jury, exceptions relating to the admission and rejection of testimony, to rulings of the trial justice in refusing and granting requests to charge, and to certain parts of the charge, will not be considered.

R.I.—Haynes v. Greene, 124 A. 255, 46 R.I. 32.

Right of recovery and extent of recovery

(1) On appeal from judgment for appellant, questions pertaining alone to right of recovery will not be considered.

Ala.—Cocke v. Edwards, 108 So. 857, 215 Ala. 8—Jones v. Woodward Iron Co., 82 So. 26, 203 Ala. 66.

Ill.—See Carper v. Myers, 202 Ill. App. 485.

(2) Where the judgment appealed from by plaintiff is for plaintiff, the appellate court will not consider as reversible error any ruling merely on the naked question of defendant's liability, and not affecting the amount of damages recovered.

Ala.—Holloway v. Henderson Lumber Co., 82 So. 344, 203 Ala. 246—Southern Ry. Co. v. Harris, 80 So. 101, 202 Ala. 263—State v. Montgomery Sav. Bank, 74 So. 942, 199 Ala. 365.

Tenn.—All v. John Gerber Co., 252 S.W.2d 138, 36 Tenn.App. 134.

(3) However, in proceeding for damages, where appellant's witnesses placed the damages at more than four times the amount of damages awarded by jury in accordance with damages testified to by appellee's witnesses, it could not be contended that any errors were harmless.

Mo.—Accomac Realty Co. v. City of St. Louis, 152 S.W.2d 100, 347 Mo. 1224.

(4) Where property owners in actions against city for damages caused by changing grade of street failed to show any damage, errors, if any, as to other matter, would not constitute reversible error.

Neb.—Quivey v. City of Mitchell, 277 N.W. 50, 133 Neb. 727.

(5) On appeal from a judgment for nominal damages only, rulings of the trial court bearing on defendant's liability and not affecting the amount of recovery will not be considered as reversible error.

Ala.—Jones v. Spradlin, 88 So. 373, 18 Ala.App. 29.

(6) Where the trial court or jury found that plaintiff was not entitled to recover from defendant, and the finding was supported, any error in computing damages was immaterial.

Cal.—Homer Laughlin Engineers Corporation v. J. W. Leavitt & Co., 2 P.2d 511, 116 C.A. 197.

Conn.—Attardo v. Connecticut Ry. & Lighting Co., 132 A.2d 70.

Ill.—Brunner v. Yellow Cab Co., 141 N.E.2d 658, 13 Ill.App.2d 255.

Mo.—Marquand Development Corp. v. Maisak-Handler Shoe Co., 260 S. W.2d 242.

(7) In an action for injuries, errors affecting defendant's liability were harmless to defendant, where the jury found in his favor, although, as claimed, for an inadequate amount.

Mo.—Roper v. Wadleigh, App., 219 S.W. 982.

(8) Where plaintiff appeals from a judgment in his favor on the ground that the damages awarded are insufficient, the judgment is conclusive as to his right of recovery, and any ruling bearing only on such right, not affecting the amount of recovery, will not require reversal, since, if erroneous, it does not injure plaintiff.

Tex.—Burton v. McGuire, Civ.App., 3 S.W.2d 576, affirmed, Com.App., 41 S.W.2d 238.

will error be considered as to a matter which is not submitted to the jury, or considered by the court, and so has no part in the verdict or decision which is reached;[26] nor will consideration be given to an error on the trial of an issue which is admitted or not in dispute or satisfactorily established.[27]

Error confined to some particular branch, issue, or count of the case is harmless if another independent cause of action or ground of defense or issue, established without the taint of error, sufficiently sustains the determination,[28] except where the one affected by the error may have influenced or controlled the result.[29] This rule has no application where none of the issues in controversy was tried and submitted free from error,[30] unless as to one or some of the issues sufficient to sustain the result, the error was harmless or invited error.[31] Where a general verdict is returned, and different issues are involved, and it is not disclosed on what issue the verdict was based, the reviewing court cannot say under the record that any single matter or combination of matters objected to constituted reversible error.[31.5]

Mere irregularity of proceeding. A judgment, if correct, will not be reversed because of any question as to mere irregularity of proceeding which does not adversely affect or change the merits of the controversy, or is not otherwise prejudicial.[32] Ac-

Acquisition and exercise of jurisdiction distinguished

Prescribed formalities of procedure, when they relate to means by which jurisdiction is to be acquired, are substantive and must be pursued with great strictness, but when they relate to exercise of jurisdiction which is otherwise complete, a breach thereof not shown to be harmful is harmless error.

Fla.—In re Johnson, 24 So.2d 711, 157 Fla. 25.

No substantial departure from rules of procedure

In action for breach of warranty in sale of food for human consumption, where there was no substantial departure from rules of procedure as claimed by plaintiff, verdict and judgment for defendant were upheld.

N.C.—Williams v. Elson, 13 S.E.2d 246, 219 N.C. 861.

Particular irregularities held not ground for reversal

(1) Failure to follow exact wording of statute in affidavit on which warning order attorneys were appointed was not ground for reversal.

Ky.—Pruett v. Pruett's Adm'x, 192 S.W.2d 722, 301 Ky. 568.

(2) Regularly elected county judge, although he disqualified himself to act in proceedings involving probate and construction of a will, was nevertheless prohibited by constitution from appearing as counsel for plaintiff in suit in district court for construction of will, but error in permitting county judge so to act was not reversible error in absence of showing of resulting prejudice to rights of defendants.

Neb.—Tucker v. Myers' Estate, 37 N.W.2d 585, 151 Neb. 359.

(3) Where on defendant's motion to dissolve temporary injunction, plaintiff applied for disqualification and change of judge on ground defendant's attorney was trial judge's son, and defendant's attorney made no objection and judge stated that he had already indicated his intention to refuse to disqualify and al-

ground for appeal;[33] and an order directing a change in the record of the evidence to make it conform to the actual facts testified to, if irregular, is similarly not prejudicial;[33.5] nor does the fact that the method chosen by appellee to assert his rights was not that which he should have employed furnish ground for appeal, where no harm resulted to appellant therefrom.[34] Likewise, the fact that the trial court strikes matter from the record which could have no bearing on the result of the case does not furnish ground for appeal.[35]

§ 1677. Presumptions and Burden of Proof as to Effect of Error

a. Existence
b. Rebuttal of presumptions

a. Existence

(1) In general
(2) Error manifestly harmless in nature
(3) Error prima facie prejudicial
(4) Prejudice dependent on circumstances

(1) In General

The existence of prejudicial error must appear from the record, the test as to whether error will be presumed prejudicial or harmless or must be proved so being whether it was such as had any reasonable tendency to influence the final result, which sometimes depends on the intrinsic character of the error and sometimes upon all the circumstances of the particular case disclosed by the record and by legitimate inference therefrom.

Quoted in: N.D.—Ellsworth v. Martindale-Hubbell Law Directory, 289 N.W. 101, 103, 69 N.D. 610.

It is elementary that, before there can be a reversal of a judgment or decree for prejudicial error in the proceedings below, the record itself must show the existence of such error, there being no other method by which it can be shown.[36] Where lowed plaintiff to dictate application into the record for purpose of saving grounds for appeal, error, if any, by reason of plaintiff's failure to comply with statute requiring written application for disqualification of judge with notice to opposing party was harmless.

Okl.—Morissette v. Musgrave, 108 P. 2d 123, 188 Okl. 222.

(4) Fact that attorney appeared in case for client who was not party thereto or liable therein was held not reversible error.

Tenn.—Copeland v. Cherry, 95 S.W. 2d 1275, 20 Tenn.App. 122.

In an equitable proceeding in which the equities are with appellee, an appeal resting on claimed errors of adjective law should not succeed unless inflexible rules of adjective law so require.

the record is incomplete or unclear in particulars which, had they been made to appear, might well have cured the errors asserted or affirmatively shown them to be harmless, some decisions incline to treat those errors as nonprejudicial,[37] while others make the opposite assumption.[38]

In many cases there are broad statements to the effect, on the one hand, that error is presumed prejudicial unless and until something appears to the contrary, and that respondent, the party in whose favor the error or transgression is committed, has the burden of showing that the error was harmless,[38.5] or, on the other hand, that, unless the error is such that prejudice is evident on the face of the record, prejudice is not presumed, the burden being on appellant to establish prejudicial error.[38.10]

Under statute

(1) Under the rules of civil procedure enacted in 1941, the rule of "presumed prejudice" was abrogated, and the burden is cast on the complaining party to show at least that error probably resulted to his prejudice.

Tex.—Walker v. Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n, 291 S.W.2d 298—Texas Power & Light Co. v. Hering, 224 S.W. 2d 191, 148 Tex. 350.

McCarty v. Gappelberg, Civ.App., 273 S.W.2d 943, error refused no reversible error—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Henthorn, Civ.App., 240 S.W.2d 392, error refused no recie collateral, irrelevant, and without probable substantial relation to the disposition of the case, or, on the other hand, that which is so substantial in nature or so connected with the rights of the parties or the course of the proceedings that it cannot be said prima facie not to have influenced the result; and, in determining whether error will be deemed on its face to be prejudicial or otherwise, the courts act on this distinction, although usually in language so general as to seem confusing and contradictory.[39]

Thus the rule as to the first class of errors, those which are intrinsically collateral and without influence on the final result, is that the record must not only establish error, but also that the party complaining was prejudiced thereby;[40] and there must be an affirmative showing that it is not unlikely that the error affected the result.[41] The ba-versible error—Morgan v. Empire Southern Gas Co., Civ.App., 236 S.W.2d 198—Texas Power & Light Co. v. Hering, Civ.App., 218 S.W.2d 301, affirmed 224 S.W.2d 191, 148 Tex. 350—Ligon v. Green, Civ.App., 206 S.W.2d 629, error refused no reversible error—American Nat. Bank of Austin v. Sheppard, Civ.App., 175 S.W.2d 626, error refused.

(2) Accordingly, on appeal, burden was on appellant to show from record as a whole that complained of error was such that it was reasonably calculated to cause and probably did cause rendition of an improper judgment.

Tex.—Walker v. Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n, 291 S.W.2d 298.

Duff v. Matthews, Civ.App., 300 S.W.2d 679, error granted—McCarty v. Gappelberg, Civ.App., 273 S.W.2d 943, error refused no reversible error.

(3) However, complaining party is not required to demonstrate that but for erroneous ruling a different judgment would have resulted.

Tex.—Texas Power & Light Co. v. Hering, 224 S.W.2d 191, 148 Tex. 350.

McCarty v. Gappelberg, Civ.App., 273 S.W.2d 943, error refused no reversible error.

(4) The new rules prohibiting reversal of judgment except for prejudicial error should be construed in connection with rule stating proper objectives of rules, and all other applicable rules.

Tex.—Ross v. Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n, 267 S.W.2d 541, 153 Tex. 276.

Former rule abrogated by constitutional provision

Constitutional provision for setting aside a judgment only if error resulted in a miscarriage of justice abrogated former rule that prejudice is presumed from an error of law.

On the other hand, the doctrine is not a cure-all;[42.5] and the courts, in their desire to sustain what appears to be a just verdict, should not strain the doctrine beyond its legitimate function.[42.10] Accordingly, the rule is otherwise as to those er-

Conflicting inferences

The rule that instructions authorizing a recovery for elements of damage within issues, but not established by proof, are presumptively harmful is not superior to the rule that the jury will not be presumed to have awarded compensation for loss not shown by the evidence, unless the record presents strong evidence that the jury based its award on an element of damage which required definite proof and in so doing must necessarily have entered the realm of speculation.

Manifest fairness of trial judge

When it is apparent that the trial judge has made a fair effort to see that truth was established and justice done, the complaining party has the burden of showing the court's action was prejudicial.

rors which by fair and legitimate inference have a potential connection with the final verdict or judgment, and if there is such error apparent on the face of the record a presumption of prejudice arises which cannot be disregarded, unless the record affirmatively discloses that the error was not prejudicial;[43] and the judgment is ipso facto reversible for error of that character unless appellee, defendant in error, shows from the record that which clearly rebuts the presumption of prejudice.[44] The reviewing court must be convinced of the justice of the verdict and judgment and of the fact that the errors complained of did not contribute to the injury of any substantial rights before it may affirm notwithstanding error.[45] When any absolute right of appellant, as to which the court had no discretion, is denied, a presumption of prejudice results.[46]

Irrebuttable presumption under mandatory statute. Where a statute requiring the court to instruct the jury in writing unless both parties consent to oral instructions is regarded as mandatory, the failure of the court to comply therewith is irrebuttably presumed to be prejudicial, without any inquiry as to whether it in fact was actually prejudicial.[46.5]

Grant or denial of new trial. In general, on appeal from an allegedly erroneous judgment or order granting,[46.10] or denying,[46.15] a motion for a new trial the burden is on appellant to show affirmatively that the decision is prejudicial. On the oth-

Not affected by statute as to effect of harmless error
The statutory rule requiring the disregarding of nonprejudicial errors was not inconsistent with the rule that error is presumed prejudicial.
Mo.—Aronovitz v. Arky, 219 S.W. 620.

Prejudice as incident to error
"Error and prejudice go hand in hand, until the latter, which is the creature of presumption, is met and neutralized by something in the record. It follows, therefore, that the interference of the appellate court with the judgment of the lower court can be successfully invoked by showing an error in the record; for when the error is shown the law supplies and attaches the consequence of prejudice."

Particular incidental matters as prejudicial
(1) Where trial court overruled plaintiff's motion for new trial based on giving of certain instructions at defendant's request, burden rested on plaintiff of establishing reversible error in giving of the instructions complained of.
Mo.—Mueller v. Schien, 176 S.W.2d 449, 352 Mo. 180.

er hand, it is incumbent on appellant, appealing from an order granting a new trial, to show that the record is free from prejudicial error against appellee;[46.20] but it has been held that where the order granting a new trial states no reason therefor, appellee must point out prejudicial errors existing in the record which he contends justify the decision of the trial court.[46.25]

(2) Error Manifestly Harmless in Nature

Various errors have been held to be of such a nature as to make it improbable that the error is in any way connected with the result, so that an affirmative showing must be made by the appellant.

Sometimes the very nature of the error makes it improbable that it is in any way connected with the result, thus bringing it into the class of errors as to which an affirmative showing must be made by appellant, and this is true whenever the error is at most a mere irregularity in proceeding;[47] and so, typically, where technical errors and errors in matter of pleading and procedure only are relied on for reversal, and the judgment is not assailed on the merits, some indication of prejudice must be adduced by appellant.[48]

Application of rule to particular errors. Under particular circumstances, various errors have been held to be manifestly harmless within the above rule,[48.5] including the trial court's grant or refusal

Demurrers on technical grounds

Even if defendant were entitled to have separate acts stated separately in complaint, overruling of demurrer to complaint on such ground did not require reversal after trial on merits where there was no showing of prejudice.

Cal.—Alonso v. Hills, 214 P.2d 50, 95 C.A.2d 778.

Cure of defects in pleading

Where a complaint is defective in regard to the statement of some elements of the cause of action, although no requisite element is altogether omitted, it will be assumed in support of the judgment that evidence to support all requisite elements was admitted without objection.

Cal.—Hall v. Mitchell, 211 P. 853, 59 C.A. 743.

Misjoinder

A party complaining of misjoinder of causes of action must show that the error was prejudicial to obtain review on appeal.

of a motion for a change of place of trial,[48.10] the transfer of a case from one department of the district court to another,[49] a substitution of parties pursuant to the discretion confided to the trial court,[50] a direction to a referee to summon before him anyone deemed to be a necessary party,[51] the grant of a preliminary injunction in abuse of the court's discretion,[51.5] and a failure to serve notice of motion on other parties whose interest is not made to appear.[52]

Pleadings. Various errors relating to pleadings have been held to be within the rule as manifestly harmless in nature,[52.5] including the extension of time to file a pleading,[53] the denial or grant of a discretionary motion to make a pleading more definite and certain,[54] the overruling of exceptions or a special exception to a pleading,[55] and the allowance or refusal of an amendment;[56] and, in the absence of circumstances establishing the contrary, the court will conclude that appellant was not misled to his prejudice by a variance.[57]

Trial generally. Likewise, the rule has been applied in the case of the grant[58] or denial[59] of a motion for the continuance or postponement of a trial, the consolidating of cases for trial,[60] the erroneous ordering of a trial by a jury[60.5] despite a waiver thereof,[61] or the fact that the case was not tried by a jury.[61.5]

There is ordinarily no presumption that errors or irregularities in the selection or impaneling of the jury were prejudicial and the burden is on appellant to show prejudice.[61.10] Thus, there is ordinarily no presumption that questions asked in connection with the selection of jurors constitute prejudicial error.[62] So the erroneous rejection of a juror for cause is not ground for reversal in the absence of a showing of prejudice;[63] and the overruling of a challenge for cause is not prejudicial error where the record does not show that an objectionable person was left on the jury after all peremptory challenges had been exhausted.[64] Moreover, the burden is on the complaining party to establish that the trial court's ruling on the number of peremptory challenges to which the parties were entitled was prejudicial.[64.5]

A showing of prejudice is necessary as to an alleged error in excluding a witness from the courtroom while others are testifying,[65] in not excluding a witness during counsel's opening statements,[65.5] in the order of reception of evidence or the time when it is adduced,[66] and other rulings relating to matters incidental to the giving of testimony by witnesses,[66.5] in restricting counsel in the cross-examination of witnesses,[66.10] in that counsel for the appellee examine or cross-examine for purposes of impeachment and subsequently have the examination stricken without proceeding to impeach,[67] in awarding the right to open and to close,[68] and in the refusal to submit a special issue on a matter having no apparent bearing on the rights or liabilities of the parties.[69]

Mere existence of misconduct or irregularity in connection with the jury and their deliberations is not deemed such error as to require a reversal in the absence of anything to establish a likelihood that it influenced the verdict;[70] nor are statements made by counsel to the court alone in support of, or opposition to, rulings,[71] or even remarks, argument, or the conduct of counsel in the presence of the jury or some jurors;[71.5] nor are apparently innocuous remarks, statements, or conduct of the judge.[71.10]

Judicial cognizance of obvious harmlessness. Where error is necessarily and obviously harmless, the court will take cognizance of that fact of its own motion.[72]

(3) Error Prima Facie Prejudicial

Various errors are intrinsically so closely related to the result reached that their very commission is assumed to have influenced the judgment so that they raise a presumption of prejudice which must be affirmatively rebutted to avoid a reversal.

Sometimes errors are intrinsically so closely related to the result reached that their very commission will be assumed to have influenced the judgment, and so raise a presumption of prejudice whenever they occur which must be affirmatively rebutted to avoid a reversal.[72.50] It has been held that whenever the rights of a party are withheld or violated, the presumption is that he has been injured unless the contrary appears.[72.55]

Interim jury service

Where no delay was occasioned by a juror in one case serving in another case during a recess of trial proceeding in first case, and the other case involved no question of a party in common with the first case, prejudice to the parties would not be presumed by reason of such interim jury service.

Under statute

Under an amendment of the rules of civil procedure to that effect, as to error relating to the misconduct of the jury or the officer in charge of them, prejudice is not presumed but it must reasonably appear that injury probably resulted to the complaining party, the burden of so showing being on such party.

Notice of application for default judgment

Since adoption of 1939 Code, every party who has given notice of appearance before expiration of time for answering is entitled to six days' notice of application for default judgment, and prejudice is conclusively presumed from failure to give such notice.
S.D.—Heitman v. Gross, 19 N.W.2d 508, 70 S.D. 510.

Errors which have been held to be prima facie prejudicial within the above rule include errors in rulings of the trial court sustaining[73] or overruling[74] demurrers to pleadings, striking pleadings,[75] or overruling motions attacking a complaint for misjoinder of causes of action,[76] denying a change of venue for disqualification of the trial judge,[77] or a motion for a change of judges,[78] or refusing a demand for a jury trial to which a party is constitutionally entitled,[79] and errors in the admission or rejection of evidence,[79.5] the exclusion of a witness for incompetency as a witness and not on the ground of objection to his proposed testimony,[79.10] arbitrarily denying the opportunity of cross-examination,[80] denying the right of representation by counsel,[81] and striking a proper motion for new trial.[82]

Other prima facie prejudicial errors include errors in connection with the selection of the jury,[82.5] such as in overruling motions or excluding questions on the voir dire, designed to test the qualifications of the jurors,[83] or permitting disqualified persons to serve as jurors,[84] errors or misconduct relating to the deliberations of the jury,[84.5] and error in the submission of an issue to the jury.[84.10] In an action tried to the court, where a view is had by the trial judge without the consent of the parties, and his judgment is based partly on the results of his inspection, it will be reversed on appeal because it cannot be determined whether the judge erred in considering what he had before him;[85] and in a jury trial, a juror's failure to view the premises pursuant to the court's order is deemed prejudicial in the absence of any showing.[86]

The grant of a motion for a directed verdict at the close of the testimony, in violation of a statute, is presumed to be prejudicial.[86.5] The failure of the trial court to file findings of fact and conclusions of law on the request of a party is presumed to be prejudicial unless the contrary appears.[86.10]

Ruling on challenge for cause

In trespass to try title where plaintiffs specially pleaded title by limitation and court erroneously overruled plaintiffs' challenge for cause of a juror, with respect to question whether court's action was prejudicial and entitled plaintiffs to a new trial, burden of showing that evidence established conclusively issue of limitation in defendants' favor was on defendants by way of answer to contentions of plaintiffs on plaintiffs' appeal.

Not rebutted by affidavits

In a personal injury suit, after verdict for defendant, refusal to purge a jury panel of employees, stockholders, and relations of stockholders of defendant's liability insurer was prima facie harmful, and presumption of harm was not rebutted by affidavits, submitted by defendant on plaintiff's motion for a new trial, showing that none of the jurors was disqualified.

Communication with jury after retirement

Privy communications in absence of counsel, particularly when oral, between trial judge in chambers and jury engaged in deliberations in jury room concerning any matter implicated ever so remotely in consideration and decision of case are forbidden by essentials of trial procedure as imperiling principles of due process, and if record fails to disclose whether or not such communication was prejudicial, it will be presumed to be so and constitute cause for reversal of judgment.

Argument of counsel. Prejudice will likewise be presumed from improper argument or questioning by counsel,[86.15] at least where such argument or questioning is in its nature material and calculated to injure the rights of the adverse party,[86.20] such as statements of counsel in argument as to matters not within the record or irrelevant to the issues,[87] or arguments based on inferences unsupported by the evidence;[88] and prejudice may be presumed from the refusal of the court to instruct the jury to disregard improper argument.[89] However, where the jury is instructed to disregard improper argument or conduct of counsel it will be presumed that such was not prejudicial in the absence of any affirmative showing to the contrary;[90] and in general, the remedies which a trial judge applies to correct errors during the trial are deemed effective unless the contrary appears.[90.5] Moreover, it must appear in any event that the argument or misconduct complained of had some reasonably probable connection with the verdict.[91]

As a corollary to the rule with respect to improper argument, setting aside a verdict because of the misconduct of counsel in argument to the jury is no cause for reversal, unless it is shown by appellant that the argument was nonprejudicial.[92]

(4) Prejudice Dependent on Circumstances

In some types of error, such as in connection with the admission or exclusion of evidence, the giving or refusal of instructions, or the making of findings, the question of whether the error is presumed harmless or prejudicial depends in each instance on the particular circumstances of the error.

With respect to other types of error, such as the admission or exclusion of evidence, the giving of improper instructions, or the making of improper findings, as discussed below, whether the error is presumed to be or not to be prejudicial depends in each instance on the particular circumstances of the error or irregularity,[92.50] and not on any general rule as to errors manifestly harmless in nature or errors prima facie prejudicial, discussed supra subdivisions a (2) (3) of this section.

Admission of evidence. While it has been broadly stated that rulings on the admissibility of evidence, even if erroneous, do not warrant a reversal in the absence of a showing that the ruling was prejudicial,[92.55] it is the common rule, specifically stated, that where evidence, so slight, remote, or unsatisfactory that it bears no reasonable relation to the merits of the cause or, for all that appears in the record, cannot in fairness be thought to have affected the verdict, is permitted to be given to the jury, even though improperly, the error will not be presumed prejudicial, and prejudice must be established by appellant to warrant a reversal.[93]

Permitting plaintiff to prepare rough drawing in jury's presence for purpose of explaining his testimony did not warrant reversal of judgment on verdict for plaintiff, in absence of showing of any prejudice to defendant, although drawing was not identified and offered in evidence.
Okl.—Walton v. Bryan, 109 P.2d 489, 188 Okl. 358.

Extent of bias of juror
Where false or misleading information of such character as to indicate probable bias is given by a juror on voir dire, it is presumed that a free exercise of right of peremptory challenge has been so restricted as to prejudice party, and verdict must be set aside, but if information innocently withheld or given, although false, is so insignificant or trifling as to indicate only a remote or speculative influence on juror, there is no prejudice.
Ky.—Cincinnati, N. & C. Ry. Co. v. Peluso, 293 S.W.2d 556.

Misleading issues
Discharged railroad employee who had been employed under union contract with grievance procedure appealable to National Railway Labor Board, and who sued for damages and reinstatement instead of accepting discharge as final and suing for damages, proceeded on wrong theory thus presenting to jury misleading issues which court could not assume did not affect verdict for eight thousand dollars damages and which did cause prejudice to employer.

This rule has been applied where the evidence admitted was immaterial or irrelevant,[94] or where there is other and competent evidence to the same effect.[94.5] The same doctrine applies where what is involved is the admission of improper evidence on trial by the court without a jury.[95]

On the other hand, where the record shows that evidence which may, not improbably, have had a part in the final outcome of the case has been erroneously admitted for the jury's consideration, prejudice will be presumed, and the burden will rest on appellee to show affirmatively that no prejudice resulted.[96] This is particularly true where there is

Denial of motion to strike testimony

Defendant, not indicating to trial court that he considered testimony of plaintiff's witness as to plaintiff's position when struck by defendant's automobile prejudicial to defendant, takes nothing by exception to court's denial of his motion to strike such testimony.

material evidence improperly admitted;[97] but it is also true although the evidence is immaterial or irrelevant if it is nevertheless such as might have influenced the verdict.[98]

Where illegal evidence has been allowed to go to the jury over seasonable objections, prejudice will be presumed unless the record shows affirmatively to the contrary;[99] and so also such a presumption arises where evidence is admitted which is calculated to excite the jury's sympathy for appellee.[1] If the evidence improperly admitted may have been a factor in the decision, the presumption applies equally where the cause is tried by the court without a jury, and will require a reversal of the judgment unless the remaining evidence is without conflict and is sufficient to support the judgment.[2] In short, although there is some authority to the contrary,[2.5] it is frequently held that wherever it is impossible to determine from the record that prejudice did not result from the erroneous admission of evidence the error is deemed prejudicial;[3] but if the jury are instructed to disregard evidence improperly admitted, its admission cannot be presumed prejudicial.[4] It has even been held that where the trial court has instructed the jury to disregard improper questions or objectionable evidence it is presumed that no prejudice resulted from the improper question or evidence.[4.5]

Exclusion of evidence. Like principles apply to the exclusion of evidence, and where the record shows that evidence has been improperly excluded which, had it been admitted, might reasonably be expected to have influenced the verdict or judgment, it will be presumed that the error was prejudicial to appellant, and the burden is on appellee to establish

Where as to one issue, testimony was admitted which had the natural tendency of engineering racial prejudice against the losing party as to all issues, the two-issue rule did not apply, and the presumption would be indulged that such testimony influenced the general verdict of the jury, and judgments rendered thereon would be reversed.

the contrary;[5] but if, for all that appears from the record, as where there is no offer of proof, the evidence is prima facie devoid of such tendency, and would probably not have substantially altered the result, one who complains on appeal of the exclusion of such evidence must show affirmatively that he was injured thereby.[6] Thus, it is not enough for an excepting party to show that evidence was legally admissible, but he must show that its exclusion was prejudicial to him.[6.5] Denial of a motion for a view of the premises is not ground for reversal in the absence of an affirmative showing of prejudice.[7]

Instructions generally. In the giving of instructions, the same basic considerations prevail, so that if an error in an instruction is trivial or formal, or merely academic, or for any other reason could not or probably did not have any effect upon the verdict, the error will be regarded as nonprejudicial unless appellant affirmatively establishes the contrary.[8]

Failure to show source of instructions

In personal injury action arising out of automobile accident, failure of defendants to show source of instructions given comparing negligence and willful misconduct, was insufficient to meet burden assumed by defendants, as appellants, of establishing error prejudicial to them in such instructions.

Cal.—Lynch v. Birdwell, 285 P.2d 919, 44 C.2d 839.

Whether jury misled as test

The test, in Arizona, of whether giving or refusing of an instruction is reversible error, is, whether action taken by court may reasonably be presumed to have misled jury as to correct rule of law applicable to the facts.

Ariz.—Salt River Valley Water Users' Ass'n v. Arthur, 74 P.2d 582, 51 Ariz. 101.

Lack of precision

Supreme court of appeals could not infer prejudice to the plaintiff in error, even though some of the trial court's instructions could have been drawn more precisely.

W.Va.—Rouse v. Eagle Convex Glass Specialty Co., 13 S.E.2d 15, 122 W. Va. 671, 132 A.L.R. 1421.

Failing to confine jury to evidence

Although it is always good practice directly to predicate an instruction relating to facts on the belief of the jury "from the evidence," harm from failure to do so will not be presumed and reversal based thereon when it does not appear that the jury were misled thereby, their verdict being clearly within the evidence.

W.Va.—Neeley v. Cameron, 75 S.E. 113, 71 W.Va. 144.

Instruction correct in point of law

(1) Alleged error that oral charge to jury was merely abstract is not reversible error in absence of showing that jury was misled thereby.

Applying these principles to cases of conflicting instructions, the general presumption is that the jury followed the erroneous instructions,[10] unless the language contained in the different instructions can be reconciled and would ordinarily be readily understood by the jury as not conflicting.[10.5] The same principles apply also to cases where the court improperly defined the issues,[11] or submitted issues not raised by the pleadings or evidence,[12] or submitted improper elements of damages,[13] or elimi-

Instruction after long disagreement

Where a disagreement is of more than ordinary and usual duration, and, after giving of verdict-urging instruction, verdict is reached in a time short in comparison with duration of disagreement, presumption arises that instruction was prejudicial, and there should be a reversal in absence of competent evidence to indicate that final agreement did not result through coercive influence of instruction and long hours of involuntary servitude with tentative suggestion of longer confinement on further disagreement.

Where language of instructions is contradictory and there is no reference or explanation in either of them to show that one refers to an exception or to conditions not covered by the other, there can be no presumption that the conflicting statements have been reconciled by the jury.

nated from the consideration of the jury defenses or issues of fact which should have been considered.[14]

The principles have been similarly held applicable where the instructions violated the rule against charging on the facts;[15] or where the instructions improperly limited the effect of the evidence[16] or improperly stated the rule for testing the credibility of the witnesses,[17] or improperly placed or defined the burden of proof.[18] However, where instructions operate equally against both parties, the one complaining thereof must show injury.[19]

In equity actions in which the verdict of the jury is advisory only, errors in instructions cannot be successfully assigned, since it is presumed that any errors in the submission of the case to the jury were considered by the trial court before judgment was entered.[19.5]

Refusal to give requested instructions. With respect to error in the refusal to give requested instructions, while it has been held that it must affirmatively appear that there was prejudice or a miscarriage of justice resulting from such refusal in order to warrant a reversal therefor,[19.10] it has also been held that the improper refusal of instructions will be deemed to be prejudicial until the contrary is shown.[20] Thus, the adverse party must show that as a matter of fact the error was not prejudicial,[21] as by showing that the error did not in fact influence the verdict,[21.5] or that the record indicates that some other incident neutralized the error.[21.10]

Accordingly, the mere fact that a requested instruction might properly be given does not mean that the court is imperatively obliged to give it, since the court may have adequately covered the issue involved by other instructions, or other circumstances may exist having a similar effect, so appellant is under the duty of offering to the reviewing court some indication that he has been harmed by the refusal;[22] and a fortiori when there is no request, but merely an omission to charge, appellant must show injury.[23]

Submission of issues without instructions. Submission to the jury of the pleadings, without instruc-

What record must disclose to save judgment

The appellate court will reverse a judgment for error in refusing an instruction unless it can see from the whole record that even under correct instructions a different verdict could not rightfully have been found, or unless it is able to see that the erroneous ruling could not have influenced the verdict.

Prejudice or presumption must be shown

Party who asserts error on refusal to give requested instruction must show either that refusal of trial court to give such instruction was in fact prejudicial to such party or that action of trial court under particular circumstances was such that prejudice would be presumed.

tions defining the issues, while erroneous, will not be presumed prejudicial.[24]

Findings and conclusions. Error in findings is similarly prima facie prejudicial, where reasonably tending to appellant's injury;[25] but where the error is not such as to have any natural or apparent connection with the judgment, the burden is on appellant to point out in what respect it was prejudicial.[26] Accordingly, where the findings do not cover all material issues but any further findings must have been adverse to appellant, there has been held to be a presumption that failure to find on all issues was without prejudice.[27] However, on a total failure of the court to file findings of fact, although requested, prejudice will be presumed.[28] Appellant has the burden of showing that an erroneous change in a fact finding was prejudicial to his cause.[28.5]

A judgment will not be reversed because of a possibly erroneous conclusion of law, unless it is established that it led to an erroneous result;[28.10] and an erroneous conclusion of law which is mere surplusage is not reversible error.[29]

Dismissal or substitution as to parties. Erroneous dismissal of an action as to one of the parties is prima facie prejudicial;[30] but a substitution of parties during the trial raises no presumption of prejudice.[31]

b. Rebuttal of Presumptions

The rebuttal of a presumption of prejudice or of harmlessness by a contrary showing depends on all circumstances relevant to indicate whether or not the error had any influence on the final result in the court below.

A presumption as to whether an error is harmless or prejudicial is rebuttable by a contrary showing.[31.50] Thus, a presumption of prejudice may be rebutted by a showing that the error did not affect the verdict or judgment.[31.55] The appellate court, in determining whether error was probably harmless or probably prejudicial, is guided by all the various factors which appear in the case and tend to show the likelihood of consequential injuries, such as the award of damages, which, when excessive, tend to show prejudice, and, when not, indicate its absence,[32] and the force of the evidence to sustain the verdict rendered, the rule being that if it is barely sufficient for that purpose or preponderates against the verdict or leaves the issue doubtful, errors which might otherwise be disregarded as harmless may be deemed prejudicial.[33]

The determination will be made in the light of the assumption that the jury was of ordinary intelligence,[34] and that, in a case involving several issues independently capable of sustaining the determination, the verdict was based upon one which was unaffected by the error, when there is nothing to suggest the contrary.[35] Where an error on the trial is overlooked by alert and able counsel that is a circumstance which tends to show that it was so trivial and without probable effect as to be harmless.[36]

Upon the suggestion that any part of the record will show that an apparently prejudicial error is harmless, the court must examine the record;[37] but it need not search the record when the suggestion is made that an apparently harmless error is prejudicial, unaccompanied by any specification of the manner in which harm arises or the portion of the record which will disclose it.[38] If the record as a whole overcomes the presumption of prejudice established by the commission of error, and shows affirmatively that no substantial rights of appellant have been injuriously affected, appellee thus sustains the burden imposed on him and the judgment will not be reversed in any case.[39] Conversely, if the record affirmatively establishes a violation of substantial rights, the judgment must be reversed unless it further discloses that, notwithstanding such violation, no injury ensued.[40]

It need not be shown that prejudice actually did result from the errors complained of.[41] If a sufficient showing is made to create a reasonable doubt as to its harmlessness, whatever presumption against prejudice might exist otherwise is overcome;[42] and a reasonable possibility of injury attributable to the error calls for reversal.[43] If, on the other hand, the error is such as is presumed prejudicial, it must be affirmatively established that no harm did result from it, and if that is left in any doubt, the presumption is not rebutted.[44]

In any event, any presumption of prejudice arising from erroneous submission of matter to the jury is rebutted by affidavits of the jurors that they gave such matter no consideration in arriving at their verdict;[45] and the same is true as to matter improperly before the court, in a trial without a jury, where the judge states that such matter was not considered by him in reaching his determination.[46] Appellee's mere statement that errors which are prima facie prejudicial were cured by other matters occurring during the trial, where there is nothing disclosed by the record in support of that assertion, is insufficient.[47]

Waiver of error. The fact that a certain error was waived by the parties results in the conclusive presumption that appellant was not harmed thereby.[47.5]

a. In General

It is a rule of universal application that appellant cannot complain of, or seek review as to, errors which were favorable to him or operated in his favor.

In accordance with the universal rule of appellate procedure that a party cannot assign as error that which is not prejudicial to him, as discussed supra § 1676, it is a concomitant rule of universal application that appellant cannot complain of errors which were favorable to himself or operated in his favor.[48] However, this rule does not apply where an error, although superficially favorable to appellant, may, under the circumstances, have influenced the jury against him provoking a reaction resulting in harm to him.[49]

Provisional remedies; interlocutory proceedings. Increase by interest of the amount tendered when it is deposited in court is not a ground of complaint available to plaintiff.[50] Similarly, defendant may not object, on appeal, to plaintiff's motion to vacate an attachment levied on defendant's property[51] or to an order permitting dissolution of a temporary injunction upon the giving of bond.[52] An order directing a garnishee to pay money into court, without proof of any debt owed by him to defendant, cannot be complained of by a party other than the garnishee.[53]

b. Pleadings and Proof

Appellant cannot complain of erroneous rulings with respect to pleadings, issues, proof and variance, or evidence, where they operate in his favor.

Appellant cannot complain of erroneous rulings with respect to pleadings which operate in his favor.[54] This proposition has been followed in respect of rulings on demurrers,[55] the striking of portions of the adversary's pleadings,[56] or allowing,[57] requiring,[58] or refusing to allow[59] amendments of pleadings. Appellant cannot complain that appellee did not ask for all he was entitled to recover,[60] did

Severance of claims for separate trials

Where evidence was insufficient to establish geographical location of dam allegedly erected by plaintiff and his damages in connection therewith, trial court could have entered judgment against plaintiff on his claim for damages for improvements allegedly made in good-faith belief that he owned land on which they were made, and hence plaintiff could not complain, on appeal, of action of trial court in severing such claim for separate trial at a future date.
Tex.—Minchen v. Ament, Civ.App., 266 S.W.2d 257, error refused no reversible error.

Parties

South Carolina truck owner who was being sued for injuries sustained in collision between automobile and truck in Virginia could not complain because his liability insurer which was nonresident was made a party to suit.
S.C.—Andrews v. Poole, 188 S.E. 860, 182 S.C. 206.

Election

(1) Allowing one, having an election between two kinds of action, to sue in that which is subject to the greater number of defenses and permits the smaller recovery is not an error of which defendant can complain.
Or.—Thompson v. Union Fishermen's Co-op. Packing Co., 246 P. 733, 118 Or. 436.

(2) A property owner cannot complain that a contractor, entitled to either the reasonable value of his services or the difference between the amount paid and that contracted for, sued for the smaller sum.
Tex.—Live Oak Dairy Corporation v. Kaase, Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 657.

(3) In a suit in the nature of a suit in equity, where the judgment on the proof submitted permits plaintiff to elect between two methods of relief, and he elects to accept judgment against certain defendants for a lesser sum than he would have had against them under the other method, they cannot complain of his election.
Okl.—Henderson v. Arkansas, 176 P. 751, 71 Okl. 253.

Stay of execution

A week's stay of execution, preserving statutory time for appeal, cannot be complained of by the losing party.
Conn.—Gruber v. Friedman, 132 A. 395, 104 Conn. 107.

Actual injury the test

A party in fact injured by the decree in a cause is entitled to urge error, despite a judicial declaration in connection therewith that the terms of the decree were favorable to him.
La.—Hewes v. Baxter, 13 So. 817, 821, 45 La.Ann. 1049, 1059.

Reservation of right of further demurrer

Where demurrer to complaint is properly sustained on the ground that the action could not be maintained against defendant, reserving the right to further demur, if error, is harmless.

not state as many grounds for recovery as the evidence seemed to warrant,[61] or assumed, by his allegations, an unnecessary burden of proof;[62] nor can appellant complain that he himself was given a longer time in which to plead than he was entitled to.[63]

Splitting causes of action; misjoinder of parties. Permitting the splitting of causes of action[64] or the misjoinder of parties[65] may not be complained of, where they operated to the benefit of appellant.

Issues, proof, and variance. Where appellee assumes a more onerous burden in establishing his case than is required of him under his pleadings, appellant cannot complain of the variance;[66] and defendant may not complain of plaintiff's failure to introduce evidence in support of a special damage item,[67] or of the court's requiring the adverse party again to prove a matter already established.[68] If plaintiff undertakes to prove, as part of his case, matters which he need not prove such as matters presumed in his favor and requiring disproof by defendant, the latter cannot complain thereof on appeal.[69] Where plaintiff consents that the jury may find the contract to be as alleged in defendant's answer rather than as alleged in the complaint, defendant cannot object thereto on appeal.[70]

Evidence. The rule that appellant cannot complain of errors which were favorable to himself, discussed above, has been applied to errors relating to evidence,[70.5] such as errors relating to the question of burden of proof,[70.10] or the scope of cross-examination.[70.15]

Appellant cannot complain of rulings admitting,[71]

Permitting questioning by juror
Where after both sides had completed introduction of evidence but before court had passed on instructions, court without objection from either side called one of defendants to stand and permitted juror to ask him a number of questions and only ruling made by court was favorable to plaintiff and in accord with his suggestion, there was no adverse ruling and no exception of plaintiff on which to base an assignment of error.

Admission of photograph

Where plaintiff's photograph of scene of automobile accident was taken shortly before trial and at time when shrubbery was not leafed out, and was more favorable to defendant on question of plaintiff's visibility of intersecting highway than it was to plaintiff, and defendant's photographs which were taken shortly after accident disclosed a greater obstruction to plaintiff's visibility, defendant could not complain of admission of plaintiff's photographs.

Hypothetical questions

(1) The omission from a hypothetical question as to the distance within which a street car could be stopped of a recital of the number of passengers in the car was not prejudicial to defendant, where the evidence showed the car was practically empty, as presumably it could be stopped shorter with a smaller load.

excluding,[72] or striking[73] evidence, where such rulings operate in his favor or against appellee.

c. Trial and Submission to Jury

A party cannot complain of errors favorable to himself in connection with the conduct of the trial and the submission of the case or an issue to the jury.

The general rule, under which a party cannot complain of errors favorable to himself, has been applied in the case of assignments of error to remarks of the court[74] or of counsel;[75] to misconduct of the jury during their deliberations, where the issue under consideration was decided favorably to appellant;[75.5] to misconduct of jurors in connection with statements or discussions calculated to operate advantageously to appellant in the determination of the amount of the verdict;[76] and to a failure to exclude the jury at the time of appellant's offer of inadmissible evidence tending to support his case.[77]

The rule has also been applied to rulings directing the adverse party to appear for examination after his refusal to answer questions at a prior examination,[78] giving appellant the right to open and close,[79] refusing a continuance to procure the attendance of an adverse witness,[80] or preventing counsel for the adverse party from commenting on evidence introduced by appellant;[81] and to a refusal of the court to permit one of appellant's adversaries to remain in the courtroom during the trial,[82] or a re-

Leading questions

Permitting plaintiff to state leading questions to a former employee of defendant called as a witness by plaintiff, if error, was harmless, where answers were favorable to defendant.

Reception for limited purpose

Where evidence or testimony is absolutely admissible, its reception for a limited purpose only is improper, but, being error favorable to the party against whom it is offered, it cannot be complained of by him on appeal.

call of the jury, after they have been sent out, to give additional instructions favorable to appellant.[83]

Submitting case or question to jury. Any error in sending the case or an issue to the jury is not a basis for objection on appeal where it operates in favor of appellant.[84] Thus, a party in whose favor the jury answered a question submitted cannot complain of error in the submission of the question;[84.5] and so also a submission of the case to the jury furnishes appellant with no ground of complaint where the evidence is such as to warrant the court in directing a verdict against him.[85] Moreover, where the evidence warrants a directed verdict for defendant, the granting of a nonsuit is harmless to plaintiff.[85.5]

Similarly, appellant cannot complain of the erroneous submission of a question of law to the jury where the decision of the court on such question would necessarily have been against him,[86] or where such submission gives the jury an opportunity to find against appellee on a question of fact that should not have been submitted to them.[87] More-

where the court itself disposes of the issue favorably to appellant's contention;[95] nor can plaintiff-appellant, after dismissal at the close of his case, complain of the action of the court in refusing to hear defendant's side of the controversy.[95.5]

d. Instructions

Appellant cannot complain of error with respect to instructions where such error operates in his favor, as where an instruction is too favorable to appellant or prejudicial only to appellee.

Under the general rule heretofore stated, appellant cannot complain of error in instructions where such error operates in his favor,[96] as where the erroneous instruction was more favorable to appellant

Amended charge

Verdicts for plaintiffs would not be set aside and new trial granted where amended charge under which case was submitted was more favorable to defendant than original charge and had not been requested by defendant.

N.Y.—Winkler v. American Sundries Co., 291 N.Y.S. 944, 249 App.Div. 759, affirmed 11 N.E.2d 311, 275 N.Y. 490.

Failure to instruct as strongly as the law would warrant for appellee is favorable to appellant, who cannot complain of the court's moderation in that regard.

N.D.—North Star Lumber Co. v. Rosenquist, 151 N.W. 289, 29 N.D. 566.

Tex.—Cleburne Peanut & Products Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, Civ.App., 184 S.W. 1070, reversed on other grounds, Com.App., 221 S.W. 270.

Interpreting instruction too favorably

That defendant places an interpretation on an instruction given which makes it too favorable to him is not a ground on which he can successfully attack the judgment.

than he was entitled to or than it should have been,[96.5] or more favorable than unfavorable,[96.10] or more favorable to appellant than to appellee.[96.15]

Thus, for example, appellant cannot complain of instructions which are prejudicial only to appellee;[97]

Too favorable to coparty

(1) One defendant may not complain of an instruction because it is too favorable to his codefendant, or because it prevents a joint judgment against both defendants.
Mo.—Schneider v. Dubinsky Realty Co., 127 S.W.2d 691, 344 Mo. 654.

(2) Where plaintiff claims that negligence of two or more defendants was the proximate cause of injury, one defendant cannot complain because charge was too favorable to another defendant, since, if both are or which were less favorable to appellee than was warranted.[97.5]

Applying the above rules, appellant cannot complain of instructions which, to authorize a verdict in appellee's favor, impose on him a greater burden than the law authorizes;[98] that is, instructions liable, they are liable jointly and severally.

Conn.—Griswold v. Connecticut Co., 38 A.2d 676, 131 Conn. 248.

(3) An electric railway company, joined as defendant with the driver of an automobile in a suit by a passenger in the automobile for injuries in collision on track, cannot complain of instructions on the question of the automobile driver's negligence which were too favorable to him.

lant than he is entitled to.[26] Where his adversary was entitled to a directed verdict, appellant cannot urge objections to the instructions;[27] nor can he complain of an instruction, on a particular issue, which is peremptory and in his favor.[28]

The refusal or modification of a requested instruction more onerous on appellant, or less favorable to him, or more beneficial to appellee, than that given affords him no ground of complaint;[29] nor does a refusal of requested instructions where, in lieu of them, the court directs a verdict for appellant on the issues to which they relate,[30] where the effect of the refusal is to eliminate a cause of action on which a verdict for appellee might be returned,[31] or where the instruction requested has a natural tendency to harm appellant.[32]

Correction of judgment

(1) Where docket entry showed defendant entitled to recover on a counterclaim, plaintiffs could not complain of the correction of the judgment so as to show that the matter involved in the counterclaim was not adjudicated, not being injured thereby.

Mo.—Kirkman v. Stevenson, 238 S.W. 543, 210 Mo.App. 380.

(2) Defendant could not complain on his appeal from refusal of a motion to vacate a default judgment of an original error in the judgment or of the correction thereof reducing the judgment.

S.D.—Languein v. Olson, 227 N.W. 369, 56 S.D. 1.

Striking out portion of judgment

The court's action in striking out a portion of a judgment for plaintiffs, which action inured to the benefit of defendants, could not be complained of by the latter.

Separate judgments as to persons sued jointly. Where two persons are jointly liable on a cause of action, the entry of separate judgments against them, instead of a joint and several judgment, may under certain circumstances constitute prejudicial error.[43.5] However, where defendants are sued jointly, and separate judgments are entered against them, one defendant cannot complain that a larger judgment was entered against his codefendant.[43.10]

Inadequacy of relief or damages. The fact that a judgment, decree, or verdict against him is for a smaller sum or awards less relief than the prevailing party claims or is entitled to furnishes no ground for complaint to appellant,[44] as, for in-

43.5 Owner and lessee of vehicle; statutory provisions
Where owner of truck and lessee whose driver was operating truck at time of collision with plaintiff's truck were jointly liable, entry of separate judgments against owner and lessee, rather than a joint and several judgment, was prejudicial error as to owner, as depriving him of benefit of statute providing, as to owner of vehicle held liable because of imputed negligence, that on recovery of judgment, recourse shall first be had against the property of the operator, since under the independent damage award, plaintiff would be required to proceed against owner without first having recourse against lessee.

Miss.—Johnson v. Johnson, 198 So. 308, 189 Miss. 561.

Court's refusal to receive first verdict

Where court refused to accept jury's first verdict against defendant for reason that it was over five thousand dollars and instructed jury that recovery was limited to five thousand dollars, and it appeared that damages in excess of five thousand dollars had in fact been pleaded in ad damnum clause of declaration, and verdict for lesser amount was subsequently returned, defendants against whom verdict was returned were in no position to complain of action taken by court in refusing to receive first verdict, but such question, if to be raised at all, must have been raised by plaintiff.

property levied on is subject to execution which is less in amount than under the verdict was authorized.[53]

The rule certainly applies in cases where damages are unliquidated, as in a tort case, and defendant cannot complain that the amount of damages awarded is inadequate;[53.5] and in a tort case, a party against whom a verdict for money damages is awarded may not complain that it is a compromise verdict, because the amount of the award is inadequate,[53.10] although it has also been held that while in such case defendant cannot complain of the inadequacy of the verdict, he may challenge it as a compromise verdict.[53.15] However, the rule has been held by some decisions not to apply in cases where the issue is contract or no contract, and the alleged contract definitely, specifically, and unalterably fixes the measure of liability for breach thereof,[54] although some authorities apply the rule even in those circumstances,[54.5] holding that where a verdict was returned against defendant for an amount less than that to which plaintiff was entitled, if entitled to recover at all, defendant could not complain.[54.10]

Excessiveness of relief or damages. Conversely, appellant cannot complain where the verdict, judgment, or decree awards him relief or damages in excess of that to which he is entitled,[55] as where some recovery is allowed where none is warranted,[55.5] where the judgment allows him nominal damages although he is not entitled to recover anything,[56] or where in lieu of a partition the court enters a money decree for him in excess of the value of his interest in the property.[57]

Calculation of damages; exclusion or inclusion of items. Where the court or jury make an error in appellant's favor in the calculation of damages, he cannot complain thereof;[58] nor can he object to the exclusion or omission of items from a judgment against him[59] or their inclusion in a judgment in his favor.[60]

f. Other Matters

The rule that reversal may not be had for errors favorable to the complaining party has been applied to errors relating to costs and their taxation, motions for new trial and rulings thereon, and remittitur of part of the judgment.

Taxation of part of the costs against appellant cannot be made the basis of a complaint where he might properly have been taxed with a greater share or all of the costs;[61] and a ruling, favorable to appellant, setting aside an order for costs is similarly unavailable.[62]

Allowance of costs in the formal judgment despite the absence of any provision therefor in the order for judgment is not error prejudicial to the party to whom they are awarded;[63] and appellant cannot complain that the court denied costs to him if costs should have been assessed against him,[64] or limited the costs awarded to appellee,[65] or that appellee consented that judgment for costs should go against him.[66]

New trial. The rule that appellant cannot complain of errors which operate in his favor has been applied to matters relating to motions for new trial.[66.5] Thus, a party will not be heard to complain of a ruling granting a motion for new trial in the absence of the moving party and without notice to him;[67] and where a new trial is granted unless appellee within a stated time shall remit a portion of the recovery allowed, the part of the order relating to the remittitur is beneficial and

Ruling before time for counter-affidavits

Trial court's action, in ruling on plaintiff's new trial motion before time allowed to defendants to file counter-affidavits had expired, was not a matter of which plaintiff could successfully complain.

not prejudicial to appellant and cannot be complained of by him;[68] nor can one who appeals from an order granting new trial complain that his adversary was ordered to pay costs as a condition to the granting of the order.[69] However, the granting of a new trial on the ground of inadequacy of damages cannot be held harmless on the theory that the ruling was for the benefit of defendant, if plaintiff on a retrial recovers a larger verdict.[70]

Similarly, where a motion for new trial is refused, no complaint by the moving party on the ground that the trial court was without authority to impose a condition in the order requiring a modification of the judgment in his favor will be entertained;[71] nor, where a verdict is set aside and an additional issue submitted, may appellant complain that the court did not set aside special issues found for him.[72]

He cannot complain that a new trial was granted on a motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict if the verdict in his favor would have had to be set aside on review.[73]

Remittitur. It affords no ground for objection by appellant that part of the judgment against him has been remitted.[74]

§ 1679. Technical or Formal Errors

The appellate court will not reverse for, and will deem harmless, purely technical or formal errors; and an abstract or academic error will be disregarded.

academic will be disregarded.[76]

Failure to observe formal requirements in the institution, trial, or disposition of causes is not harmfully prejudicial, so as to call for a reversal, unless it injuriously affects appellant's rights,[77] so that no action will be taken by the reviewing court on the basis of errors which, on a consideration of the whole record, are shown not to have affected the judgment.[78]

2. Nature and Form of Remedy, and Parties and Process

§ 1680. Nature and Form of Remedy

Except where a substantial statutory right is thereby violated, where the judgment is correct and the same as would have been reached by the proper remedy or procedure, any error in such respect is harmless; but such an error is prejudicial where a different result might have been reached but for the error, or the result is one which could not possibly have been reached by the right procedure.

In accordance with the general rules as to the nature of error as harmless or prejudicial and whether or not it warrants reversal, discussed supra §§ 1676–1679, except where a substantial statutory right is thereby violated,[78.50] where the judgment is correct, and is the same as would have

Nonsubstantial errors to be discounted

"Stability of determinations of trial courts is of inestimable importance, both to the parties and the public. Technical defects, however numerous, should not constitute a basis for efficient interference. They should not count at all in that regard. Doubts should be resolved in favor of stability. Errors, however clear, inexcusable, or numerous, should be regarded as inconsequential, unless, manifestly, had they not occurred the result to the complaining party might, within reasonable probabilities, have been substantially more favorable to him."

Where bulk sales statute provided that a mortgagee failing to conform to requirements thereof should be

been reached had the proper remedy or procedure been followed or used, any error as to the remedy or procedure used or followed will be regarded as harmless,[79] as it also will where the complaining party has by the wrong procedure been accorded all of the substantial rights that he would have had under the proper procedure.[80] However, it is otherwise if a different result might have been reached but for the error,[81] or if, by the wrong remedy, a result is reached which could not properly have been reached under the correct one.[82]

The above principles apply where the wrong form of action or proceeding has been brought,[83] where the cause has been improperly tried in equity in-liable in garnishment to creditors of his mortgagor and that stock acquired should be subject to attachment, right of mortgagee failing to conform to statute to be proceeded against in manner provided therein was a substantial statutory right, and maintenance by mortgagor's creditor of direct action against mortgagee could not be considered harmless error.

Futility of any judgment

In action against irrigation district by unpaid bondholder, for partition of lands acquired by the district, refusal to permit the action to go to judgment on the bonds was not prejudicial error, since enforcement by execution would not be permitted, and hence such judgment would be futile.

Action of debt instead of trespass on the case

The fact that plaintiff should have brought an action on the case instead of an action on the debt is harmless and nonreversible error where defendant was allowed and availed himself of any defense that he would have had in the proper form of action.
R.I.—Marley v. Bankers' Indemnity Ins. Co., 166 A. 350, 53 R.I. 289.

Assumpsit instead of debt

Ill.—Babcock v. Harrsch, 141 N.E. 701, 310 Ill. 413.

Improper use of conversion

Where conditional vendee brought action in conversion against vendor, who wrongfully deprived him of possession of the property and disposed of it, so that he could not return it, a judgment for the vendee for an amount which he was entitled to receive under the facts of the case will not be disturbed, although conversion was not technically the proper action to bring.
Cal.—Carvell v. Weaver, 202 P. 897, 54 C.A. 734.

Tort instead of assumpsit

Defendant is not prejudiced by the bringing of an action in tort when it should have been brought in assumpsit, where the measure of damages would not have been different in an action of assumpsit.
Mich.—Porth v. Cadillac Motor Car Co., 176 N.W. 554, 209 Mich. 89.

Binding instructions called for if at law

The fact that the case is improperly tried in equity is harmless to defendant where, if the trial had been at law, the judge would necessarily have given binding instructions for plaintiff.
Pa.—Bank of Pittsburgh v. Purcell, 133 A. 31, 286 Pa. 114.

Under a constitutional provision that no reversal shall be had because of want of jurisdiction due to error or mistake as to whether the proceedings should be at law or in equity, unless there be other error in the proceedings, the fact that the lower court tries in equity an action which is not one of equitable cognizance is not ground for reversal.

Improper transfer of cause from equity to law or vice versa see infra § 1711.

Correct giving of peremptory instruction to jury renders harmless any error in trying the case at law instead of in equity.
Ark.—Security Bank & Trust Co. v. Bond, 201 S.W. 820, 132 Ark. 592.

Manifest miscarriage of justice required

"Where the only effect of holding that a case tried at law should have been disposed of in equity would be to send the same back to be transferred to the equity side, and heard over again by the same judge, upon probably the same testimony, this court should be reluctant to adopt such course, and not do so unless the circumstances of the case made the same necessary to prevent a manifest miscarriage of justice."

86. Minn.—Wegman v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 249 N.W. 422, 189 Minn. 325.

Common-law doctrine of negligence

In action against railroad by section hand for injuries tried under the common-law doctrine of negligence, railroad was not prejudiced by trial under such doctrine rather than under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, since question of assumed risk, which was submitted to the jury, is no longer a defense under the federal act.
Ark.—Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Bryant, 209 S.W.2d 690, 213 Ark. 149.

Where all essentials and measure of damages are the same, the fact that a case was erroneously tried and recovery allowed under the federal Employers' Liability Act, because the employee was not engaged in interstate commerce, is not ground for reversal, as the same result would have been reached under the state act.
Minn.—Wegman v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 249 N.W. 422, 189 Minn. 325.

Existence of differences between two sets of laws

(1) Where defenses are available to defendant under the federal Employers' Liability Act that are not open under the state act, and the case is one properly within the federal act, it is prejudicial error for the case to be tried under the state rather than the federal act.
Mich.—Nelson v. Ironwood & B. Ry. & Light Co., 170 N.W. 45, 204 Mich. 347.

(2) Vice versa, where there are defenses more favorable to appellant under the state law, and the case is not properly within the federal act, it is prejudicial error to try the case

§ 1681. Parties

General rules as to the nature of error as harmless or prejudicial and the effect thereof on review apply to errors or defects relating to the parties to the cause.

In accordance with the general rules as to the nature of error as harmless or prejudicial and its effect on the case on review, discussed supra § 1676–1679, unless the rights of appellant have been materially affected thereby,[87] or plaintiff is not shown to have any legal capacity to sue,[88] errors in the lower court with respect to the parties to the cause are generally regarded as harmless and not grounds for reversal.[89]

Within the above rule are errors consisting of a misjoinder of parties,[90] and errors in bringing in third persons as parties to the action or proceed-under the federal law rather than the state law.

Class actions

In suit by property owners for benefit of themselves and all others similarly situated to enjoin collection of special paving assessments which had not been collected and to require return of money which had been collected, whether suit was properly brought as a class suit was immaterial where court in its order approving master's original report required notice to all claimants to file claims within stated period and numerous claimants had complied with that order, thereby intervening in the suit, and the order confirming master's supplementary report allowed the proved claims.

Harmless failure to require election

Where several persons have joined as plaintiffs and only one of them is entitled to, and does, recover, the trial court's denial of defendant's efforts to compel an election on the part of plaintiffs as to which was entitled to prosecute the suit is without prejudice.

Mo.—Volkart v. Groom, 9 S.W.2d 947.

Confusion of issues and increase in damages

Where a misjoinder of parties plaintiff and the resulting trial of their combined grievances tends to confuse the issues and increase the damages allowed the only plaintiff who has stated a cause of action, the error is prejudicial and reversible.

Rule stated

"When a judgment, if satisfied, will protect defendant from further suit, annoyance, or loss, and the action has afforded defendant the opportunity to assert in that action all the defenses, causes of action on cross-complaint and counterclaims available to him as against the cause of action, and time has been allowed for preparation for trial, defendant's objection to the bringing in of an additional party plaintiff, of itself, will not justify a reversal of that judgment."

Cal.—Wiseman v. Sklar, 285 P. 1081, 1085, 104 C.A. 369.

Joinder of insurer held prejudicial

(1) The bringing in of an insurance company as defendant in an action against insured is prejudicial to insurer where it is not liable until the liability of insured is judicially established, and on appeal of insurer the judgment will be reversed.

N.Y.—Kromback v. Killian, 213 N.Y. S. 138, 215 App.Div. 19.

(2) In suits by insured persons, who were advanced funds by insurers and executed loan receipt agreements, against third party tortfeasors, it was prejudicial error to require plaintiffs to join insurers as parties plaintiff.

4 C.J. p 925 note 4.

Defendant nevertheless liable for whole amount

The overruling of a demurrer, on the ground that there is misjoinder of parties defendant, is harmless as to a defendant who is under legal obligation to pay the whole amount due plaintiff, since the fact that other persons are made defendants cannot affect such obligation.
Cal.—Shanklin v. Scribner, 217 P. 130, 62 C.A. 487.

Improper joinder of nonrecovering plaintiff

The fact that a plaintiff to whom no relief is awarded is improperly joined with a plaintiff for whom the judgment is rendered does not make overruling of a demurrer to the complaint reversible error on appeal by defendants, since defendants are not prejudiced thereby.
Cal.—Jones v. Peck, 218 P. 1030, 63 C.A. 397.

Prejudicial joinder of insurer

Where plaintiff has joined with defendant in a suit for damages an insurance company, who is not liable for such loss, it is reversible error for the court to overrule the defendant's plea of misjoinder, as such joinder would have a tendency to increase the recovery allowed against defendant.

Failure to make regular guardian of defendant party

"It appears that no guardian had been appointed for defendant when the suit was filed. Later a guardian was appointed. The trial court, however, did not require that the regular guardian be made a party, but appointed a guardian ad litem for the defendant—eminent counsel. While it would have been better practice to make the regular guardian a party, still we do not think defendant was in any way prejudiced by the course taken. The guardian ad litem raised every point possible in the defendant's favor. In fact he made a defense far more vigorous than the regular guardian could have done, unless that guardian had employed counsel of ability corresponding with that of the guardian ad litem. Such an irregularity does not require a reversal."

Tenn.—Pickens v. Scarbrough, 46 S. W.2d 58, 59, 164 Tenn. 75.

Necessary and indispensable parties

(1) Nonjoinder of an indispensable or necessary party not otherwise bound or precluded by the judgment or decree is ground for reversal.

U.S.—Garretson v. National Surety Co., C.C.A.Fla., 63 F.2d 847, certiorari denied National Surety Co. v. Garretson, 54 S.Ct. 55, 290 U.S. 638, 78 L.Ed. 555.

(2) This rule applies only where the interest of the omitted party is a present substantial one, and where the judgment or decree will result in depriving him of some material right without a hearing.

Ill.—Gulick v. Hamilton, 122 N.E. 537, 287 Ill. 367.

(3) In suit involving efficacy of nonassignability clause of life insurance policy, the insurer was a "necessary party" so that nonjoinder of the insurer required reversal of decree.

N.J.—Chelsea-Wheeler Coal Co. v. Marvin, 28 A.2d 505, 132 N.J.Eq. 462.

(4) In quo warranto proceedings brought in name of the state on relation of an individual who did not make himself a party thereto, and where no private rights were sought to be protected, proceeding to a final judgment of ouster against defendant without joinder of individual was reversible error, since individual was a "necessary party" and the state a mere "nominal party."

Ala.—Baxter v. State ex rel. Metcalf, 9 So.2d 119, 243 Ala. 120.

Joinder before or after judgment or decree

(1) Although a trustee in a trust deed is a necessary party in a suit to foreclose the same, error in failing to join him is cured by making him a party before rendition of decree so that it will not be reversed because of the nonjoinder.

Ark.—Snider v. Dennis, 251 S.W. 682, 159 Ark. 231.

(2) In an action by a surety against his principal to foreclose a mortgage to satisfy debts paid by surety and to subject land to payment of other debts, it is immaterial that the creditors are not made parties before the judgment, where the question of defect of parties was not raised in the proper way and at the proper time, and the creditors subsequently become parties and file their answers and cross petitions setting up their claims and electing to take their share of the proceeds.

Ky.—Hurm v. Collignon, 261 S.W. 602, 202 Ky. 807.

(3) In breach of contract action by owner of dwelling against remodeling contractor and his surety and subcontractor engaged to raise the dwelling, subcontractor was not prejudiced by not having been brought into the suit through third party petitions until after introduction of evidence had begun, where subcontractor participated in entire trial of case.

La.—Macaluso v. Thibodeaux, 94 So. 2d 426, 232 La. 431.

Omitted party precluded by action

(1) A failure to join as plaintiff another having an interest in the subject matter is error without prejudice where that other appears at trial and testifies and in effect approves of the bringing of the action so that he is estopped from disputing plaintiff's right to bring it and from seeking to subject defendant to another action for the same injury.

Ark.—Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Block, 218 S.W. 682, 142 Ark. 127, certiorari denied 40 S.Ct. 586, 253 U.S. 493, 64 L.Ed. 1029.

(2) In a suit by the assignee, a failure to join the assignor is harmless where the assignment is established by the testimony of the assignor so that he is concluded by the judgment.

Ky.—Dejarnett v. Tutt, 18 S.W.2d 968, 230 Ky. 99.

(3) In an action by a tenant against a landlord for permitting another lessee, in violation of his lease to engage in business in competition to plaintiff, the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that such other lessee had not been joined as defendant is not reversible error, where such lessee knew of the proceeding and participated as a witness in such a man-irregularities in allowing the joinder of new parties,[98] or refusing to allow or require the addition of a proper or necessary party;[99] a failure to act on a frivolous application to bring in a new party;[1] dismissing a party from the case,[2] or failing,[3] or refusing[4] to dismiss or strike a party; or comner as to become bound by the decree.

Md.—Snavely v. Berman, 121 A. 842, 143 Md. 75.

(4) In a suit brought by the grantee of land against the holder of a mortgage thereon to reform a deed whereby plaintiff acquired title by striking out, because inserted by mistake, a clause assuming the mortgage, a failure to join plaintiff's grantor as a party is harmless where the grantor appeared as witness and testified in plaintiff's favor that the assumption clause was inserted by mistake, so that the grantor becomes estopped to deny that fact.
Or.—Welch v. Johnson, 183 P. 776, 93 Or. 591, rehearing denied 184 P. 280, 93 Or. 591.

(5) It has been held by other courts, however, that the fact that a person who is a necessary party plaintiff, and not joined, appears and testifies in favor of plaintiff does not cure the error or render it harmless.
W.Va.—Coffman v. Hope Natural Gas Co., 81 S.E. 575, 74 W.Va. 57.

(6) Where witness, who testified for parties who claimed title to property by adverse possession and as beneficiaries of alleged parol trust, appeared to own a fractional interest in property, he would have been estopped to assert his interest had judgment been rendered in favor of beneficiaries, and, therefore, failure to include witness as party to action was not fundamental error.

Judgment binding on nonjoined necessary party

If a necessary party, for whose use and benefit plaintiff assumed to sue, was personally present at trial of the suit, directing the suit as far as it affected his interests, so that judgment therein would bind him, there is no reversible error in refusing to make him an actual party of record.
Tex.—Perkins v. Terrell, Civ.App., 214 S.W. 551, error refused.

Summons not yet served
Where summons and complaint erroneously named intended defendant's brother as sole defendant and summons was not served on intended defendant, amendment of complaint to correct misnomer was not prejudicial to intended defendant, since he had not yet been brought into court and case could be considered as one in which no process had issued.
N.J.—Patrick v. Brago, 66 A.2d 749, 4 N.J.Super. 226.

Professional name
Where television and radio performer used a professional name in his television and radio work, and he brought action in his professional name to recover damages for assault and battery, and record disclosed his actual name, defendant was not prejudiced because trial court overruled defendant's motion to make the television and radio performer a party plaintiff in his real name.
Kan.—Sanders v. Sitton, 292 P.2d 1099, 179 Kan. 118.

Disregarding a defect in designating a party by the initial of his name instead of by his christian name is not ground for reversal where harmless.
Mich.—Stever v. Brown, 77 N.W. 704, 119 Mich. 196.

Designating plaintiff as trustee
In an action for a balance due for building a hunting lodge for defendant, an amendment designating plaintiff, after his coplaintiff's death, as surviving trustee of a certain realty trust was unnecessary, but was permissible and harmless to defendant.

Improper service
Under rule prohibiting service of process on Sunday, except in cases of injunction, etc., rendering of default money judgment was reversible error where service of citation was had on Sunday.
Tex.—Bostwick v. Allen, supra.

Notice of lis pendens
In some instances a defect in the notice of lis pendens may furnish prejudice results, the erroneous issuance of process,[25] or the absence of process[26] or notice,[27] or defects in process[28] or notice,[29] or improper service of process,[30] or failure to obtain service of process on a party,[30.5] will not operate to reverse the judgment.

Similarly, while errors or defects in connection with the return or proof of service of process or notice, or subsequent proceedings relating to process or notice, may under some circumstances constitute ground for reversal,[30.10] where no prejudice results, defects in the affidavit or return of service,[31] or error in setting aside process,[32] in quashing the service of process,[32.5] in overruling a motion to quash service or the return of service,[33] or in permitting,[34] or refusing to permit,[35] amendment of process, or permitting the amendment of the return or proof of service,[35.5] will not operate to reverse the judgment.

3. Pleadings

§ 1683. Defective or Insufficient Pleadings

Defects or insufficiencies of the pleadings which do not affect the determination of the case on the merits or prejudice the substantial rights of the opposite party afford no basis for a reversal.

Where they have not been the cause of or have not resulted in an incorrect decision or judgment on the merits,[36] defects or insufficiencies with respect to pleadings which do not operate to the ground for the reversal of the decree.

Unauthorized extension of time
Where plaintiff in slander action obtained personal service on defendant while defendant was in the state for purpose of attending a civil action, and affidavit on which warrant of attachment on defendant's property was based stated that defendant was a resident of North Carolina and trial court found that defendant was Florida resident, defendant was not prejudiced by trial court's extension of time for plaintiff to commence service by publication even though mandatory period for service by publication after issuance of warrant of attachment had expired.

Substance of action

Appellate court must consider substance of action, irrespective of pleading formalities.

Ill.—Parker v. Parker, 81 N.E.2d 745, 335 Ill.App. 293.

Technical view of pleadings

(1) Where there has been a trial on merits, court is slow to reverse judgment on technical view of the pleadings.

Ky.—Conley v. Coburn, 179 S.W.2d 668, 297 Ky. 292.

(2) In equity, weight may be given technicalities in procedure, where the litigation is a matter of private rights, but a technical mistake in pleading is wholly useless when the decision would result in the plain violation of a statute.

Technical and nonmisleading errors

(1) Erroneous allegations in the petition which are technical and neither mislead defendant nor affect his substantial rights are harmless and not grounds for reversal.

Fictitious names

Where defendants were designated in complaint by fictitious names and designation was not changed by amendment of complaint thereafter, but defendants appeared and were properly named in judgment, omission to amend and correct names was not prejudicial.

the pleadings sufficiently specific;[63] failure expressly to describe the transaction which formed the basis of the suit by its legal name;[64] the setting out of matter in a reply[65] or supplemental pleading,[66] which should have been set up by amendment; the setting up in the original or amended petition of matters which should have been set up by way of reply,[67] or in a supplemental petition of matters which should have been alleged in the original;[68] the setting up by way of cross complaint of matters which should have been set up in the defense;[69] the attachment of defective or insufficient instruments to the pleading;[70] the failure to file proper orders and papers with the declaration;[70.5] or the demand in the pleading of something which is impossible of performance.[71]

Defects in the pleadings may be cured or rendered harmless for the purposes of the above rule in a variety of ways or circumstances, as where no evidence is offered or admitted in support of the unnecessary or improper averments;[72] another pleading properly sets up that matter which renders the one pleading defective;[73] the issue as to which the allegations are insufficient or the pleading defective is not submitted to the jury;[74] although the answer is insufficient, the petition does not state a cause of action;[75] defendant by reason of a previous trial has been fully apprised of the contents of

"And/or"

(1) Use of term "and/or" was not prejudicial to defendant even though it created uncertainty, particularly where the matter could have been reached by timely demurrer.
Cal.—Archibald v. Schultz, 58 P.2d 233, 14 C.A.2d 320.

(2) "We must condemn the use of the words 'and/or' because they tend to confuse and mislead. While the use of these words in the allegation above quoted is not so inappropriate as in many cases which come before us, we mention them here to show our disapproval of them. In a close case where these words are used, a situation may be presented that would warrant this court in reversing a judgment or decree."
Ill.—Preble v. Architectural Iron Workers' Union of Chicago, 260 Ill. App. 435, 442.

(3) "In the matter of the use of the alternative, conjunctive phrase 'and/or,' it is sufficient to say that we do not hold this to be reversible error, but we take our position with that distinguished company of lawyers who have condemned its use."
Fla.—Cochrane v. Florida East Coast Ry. Co., 145 So. 217, 218, 107 Fla. 431.

Uncertainty removed by trial

Although the petition may leave it somewhat uncertain as to the theory on which plaintiff is proceeding, if the case is tried throughout on one definite theory which is clearly understood by the parties, the defect in the pleading is harmless.

Matters avoiding defense

Where the petition in advance sets up matters in avoidance of a defense subsequently raised in defendant's answer, a failure of plaintiff to set the matters of avoidance up by way of reply, as was proper practice, is harmless error.
Ky.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Miller, supra.

Reasons for rule

"It would be a vain and useless thing to reverse a correct judgment rendered upon a full development of the facts because the basis of it was alleged in the petition instead of being inserted in the reply."

Ill.—White v. Chicago, 58 N.E. 917, 188 Ill. 392.

Uncertified copies

The failure to certify copies of papers attached to the pleadings is immaterial and harmless where there is no showing that such copies are incorrect and defendant had possession of the originals and was familiar with their contents.

of the pleading and it contains good parts or divisions sufficient to sustain the judgment or verdict, and to which it can clearly be referred, the presence of the defective part or division is often held to be harmless and immaterial;[84] but if one of the two paragraphs in a complaint is faulty, and it does not appear from the record that the judgment for plaintiff rests entirely upon the other paragraph, it cannot be affirmed.[85] If a complaint alleges several different acts which constitute separate causes of action, and alleges only the total amount of damages flowing therefrom, and damages are found and awarded on the same theory, defendant is prejudiced thereby.[86]

§ 1684. —— Misjoinder of Causes of Action or Defenses

In the absence of substantial prejudice, a misjoinder of causes of action or defenses is not a ground for reversal.

Unless appellant's rights have been substantially affected thereby,[86.50] a misjoinder of causes of action or defenses is not a ground for reversal.[87] So, an alleged misjoinder of counts in contract and in tort is not harmful to defendant who is by a bill of particulars fully appraised of the facts and theory on which plaintiff's claim is based and on which the case is tried.[87.5]

Judgment conditional on performance of condition not alleged
Where plaintiff seeking to avoid the effect of releases for a personal injury claim fails to plead or tender repayment of the consideration paid him for the releases, the error in this respect is immaterial and harmless where the judgment provides for a cancellation of the releases only if plaintiff repays or tenders the consideration to defendant.

Introduction of prejudicial evidence
Where the improper joinder of a cause of action permits the introduction of evidence which is highly prejudicial and likely to influence the jury in plaintiff's favor on the other cause of action, the error is prejudicial and reversible although the cause of action improperly joined does not go to the jury.

Abandonment of one cause
Where plaintiff misjoins two causes of action but subsequently abandons one of the causes, defendant can in no way be prejudiced by the misjoinder.

Consolidation proper
(1) Where causes of action alleged to have been misjoined could have been consolidated, defendant is not prejudiced by the misjoinder.
Ark.—Catlett v. Bradley, 47 S.W.2d 15, 185 Ark. 260.

(2) Joinder of plaintiffs and of causes of action, in two separate actions against the same defendants which could have been consolidated for trial if brought by each plaintiff singly, and were consolidated without objection by defendants, was not prejudicial.

Curing improper cumulation of causes
In action by landlord against tenant for eviction and money judgment for unmatured rent, it was proper for trial court to cure any improper cumulation of causes of action by restricting trial of cause to eviction matter and recalling rule with respect to demand for judgment for unmatured rents.

§ 1685. Rulings on Pleadings

Erroneous rulings on pleadings which do not adversely affect the substantial rights of the complaining party will not furnish grounds for reversal.

Erroneous rulings on pleadings not resulting in injury to the substantial rights of appellant, nor affecting the decision on the merits, are harmless and nonprejudicial and not cause for reversal;[88] but it is otherwise if appellant has been deprived of a substantial right or benefit to which he is entitled.[89]

Rulings to which the foregoing principle has been applied are those overruling a motion to separate a complaint or petition into paragraphs or counts;[90] requiring plaintiff separately to state and tion against some of defendants with tort action against remaining defendants was harmless, where contract action against some of defendants was dismissed and case proceeded as one in tort against remaining defendants.

Abandonment of one cause of action

The error of the court in overruling a motion to require a pleading to be separated into two counts is harmless where plaintiff later elects to proceed on only one of the theories or causes set forth in his petition.

Another action pending

The error of the trial court in not abating a suit because there was another cause between the same parties and for the same cause pending on appeal cannot be considered, where the appeal of the other case was dismissed before instant case was appealed, and where it is not claimed that the judgment of dismissal in the other case, which was not introduced in evidence in instant case, was res judicata.

Tex.—Gulf Pipe Line Co. v. Smith, Civ.App., 42 S.W.2d 812.

(2) Where the proceedings are absolutely void for want of jurisdiction, the overruling of a plea in abatement on that ground is reversible error.

Tex.—Stewart v. Poinbocuf, 233 S.W. 1095, 111 Tex. 299.

(3) Where court was without jurisdiction if action was not commenced in county of defendant's residence, it was reversible error to refuse to hear plea in abatement alleging that defendant was not a resident in county.

the complaint, but nevertheless permitting a recovery.[2]

Errors in rulings on pleadings may be cured by incidents of the trial.[2.5] Thus, rulings with respect to pleadings are often rendered or considered harmless because the case was fully and fairly tried on the merits without reference thereto;[3] the issues involved in the pleadings and rulings were found in favor of the complaining party;[4] an amended pleading has been filed;[5] the pleadings with respect to which the rulings were made amounted to nothing more than surplusage,[6] were withdrawn before the trial,[7] or were withdrawn by the court from the consideration of the jury;[8] plaintiff eliminated from the complaint counts the rulings on which were complained of;[9] the evidence subsequently offered in support of the pleading ruled on was insufficient to sustain it;[10] or the pleading, in response to which the pleading on which the rulings have been made has been filed, is not supported by the evidence.[11]

Likewise, rulings with respect to pleadings may be rendered or considered harmless because the complaining party otherwise obtains the benefit of the matters set up in the pleading, or that portion thereof, adversely ruled on;[12] the party who has filed the pleading in favor of which the ruling is made fails to obtain any advantage or relief by reason of the pleading;[13] his pleadings as a whole would not entitle the complaining party to prevail even though adverse rulings had not been made on some of the pleadings;[14] or because the error has been cured by the instructions,[15] the verdict,[16] the findings,[17] or the judgment;[18] but, after the appeal has been taken, no act on the part of appellee without the consent of appellant can cure a reversible error.[19]

If the erroneous ruling is with respect to only one part of a pleading, it is harmless and immaterial where the verdict or decision is based on another part of the pleading,[20] or where the complaining party could avail himself of all the advantages given by that part of the pleading ruled against under,

§ 1686. —— Filing or Withdrawal

Erroneous rulings of the court permitting, or refusing to permit, the filing or withdrawal of pleadings are not ground for reversal where no substantial injury results therefrom.

Rulings of the court permitting,[22] or refusing to permit,[23] the filing of pleadings do not constitute a ground for reversal where no substantial injury results therefrom. Such also is the rule with respect to erroneous rulings permitting,[24] or refusing to permit,[25] the withdrawal of pleadings.

or exceptions,[27] although erroneous, are harmless and not ground for reversal where the substantial rights of the objecting party are not affected thereby; but reversal can be had because thereof if by reason of the ruling appellant has been prejudiced or deprived of a substantial right.[28]

§ 1687(2). —— —— Sustaining Demurrer or Exception

a. In general
b. To part of pleadings
c. Error cured by amendment or withdrawal

a. In General

Although erroneous, the sustaining of a demurrer or exception to a pleading is usually regarded as harmless where the complaining party could in no event have derived any substantial benefit from the matters set forth therein, he otherwise obtains the full benefit of such matters, or it is shown by the evidence, findings, or otherwise, that the matters set forth have no foundation in fact.

Sustaining a demurrer or exception to a pleading, although error, is harmless and not ground for reversal where it does not adversely affect the rights of the complaining party or influence the final outcome of the case,[29] but not when his rights are substantially affected thereby.[30]

Petition or complaint. In accordance with the above rule, the sustaining of a demurrer to a declaration or complaint is harmless error where plaintiff would nevertheless not have been entitled to a substantial recovery even had the demurrer been overruled,[31] the pleading is incapable of being amended without departure therefrom,[32] or notwithstanding the ruling, plaintiff otherwise obtains all the benefits he would have had had the pleading been permitted to stand.[33]

Error in sustaining with respect to some counts of a declaration and denying with respect to others a demurrer addressed to the entire declaration is harmless where it is not shown that the ruling resulted in prejudice to plaintiff.[33.5] Furthermore, plaintiff is not harmed by a ruling sustaining a demurrer to the complaint as defectively stating a good cause of action, rather than a statement of a defective cause of action, where plaintiff is entitled to amend.[33.10]

The erroneous sustaining of a general demurrer to a petition or complaint may, however, be ground for reversal where the petition or complaint states a substantial cause of action,[34] even though plaintiff fails to offer proof in support of his petition after the demurrer has been sustained.[35] A judgment based on sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend will not be affirmed on appeal un-

Amended petition

Where petition as amended was subject to general demurrer, in absence of a showing that only demurrer to original petition was ruled on, or that opportunity to amend amended petition was denied, any error in order sustaining demurrer as to petition as amended was harmless.
Ga.—Beatus v. Darling Stores Corp., 33 S.E.2d 37, 72 Ga.App. 84.

Jury finding against plaintiff

Where the jury find against plaintiff on that portion of his petition to which the demurrer is sustained, the error is harmless.
Ala.—Kimbrell v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., Ala., 67 So. 586, 191 Ala. 392.

Lack of evidence

If there is no evidence to sustain the complaint, the sustaining of a demurrer thereto is harmless.
Ga.—Andrews v. Butts County, 114 S.E. 912, 29 Ga.App. 302.
4 C.J. p 932 note 16.

If only nominal damages could have been recovered, error in sustaining a demurrer to the complaint is harmless.

Special demurrer

Chancellor, after having sustained special demurrer to petition, was not required to rule on general demurrer, and hence chancellor's error in sustaining general demurrer would not require a reversal.
Ky.—Tinsley v. Gibson, 183 S.W.2d 528, 298 Ky. 533.

Full hearing on same issues in cross action

(1) Any error in sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's petition is harmless, where there was a full hearing on a cross action presenting the identical issue.
Tex.—Brown v. Spornitz, Civ.App., 6 S.W.2d 219.

(2) Plaintiffs were not prejudiced by erroneous sustaining of defendant's demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint, where defendant's cross complaint and answer to cross complaint tendered all material issues presented by original complaint, and case was tried on those issues and finally submitted to the court, and by the court decided under the issues and proofs presented thereunder.
Idaho.—Varkas v. Varkas, 130 P.2d 867, 64 Idaho 297.

If a demurrer to a similar complaint subsequently filed is overruled, error in sustaining a demurrer to the prior complaint is harmless.
Tex.—Shaw v. Harris, Civ.App., 8 S.W.2d 194.
4 C.J. p 931 note 13.

Permitting plaintiff to introduce evidence to sustain averments of complaint renders harmless error in sustaining demurrer thereto.

less it appears not only that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, but also that it cannot be amended to do so.[35.5]

Prejudicial error in sustaining a demurrer to a complaint on the ground of misjoinder of parties or causes is not rendered harmless by reason of the fact that, after plaintiff eliminated one of the defendants, judgment was rendered against him in favor of the other,[36] or the fact that plaintiff fails, because of insufficiency of the evidence, to recover on the one cause of action he has been compelled to proceed on;[37] but it also has been held that error in sustaining a demurrer to a petition for misjoinder of causes will not be considered by the appellate court where plaintiff, after the ruling, has voluntarily dismissed as to one cause of action.[38]

Plea or answer. Sustaining a demurrer or an exception to a plea or answer is harmless where such pleading could not have been amended so as to cure the defects,[39] plaintiff was required to make his proof of all material allegations,[39.5] the matter set up would not have constituted a defense,[40] the issue presented by the plea is fully litigated,[40.5] defendant otherwise had the benefit of the defense set forth,[41] or it has been subsequently established

Opportunity to amend

Where petition is dismissed on all grounds of general and special demurrers and is not subject to the general demurrer, fact that one or more of the special grounds may be good will not preclude reversal of judgment, where no opportunity was given below to plaintiff to amend to meet the defect.

by the evidence,[42] the findings of the jury,[43] or a distinct admission of defendant,[44] that the pleading was without merit or not true in fact. Introduction of evidence on issue

The mere fact that defendant is permitted to introduce evidence on the issue raised by the plea to which the demurrer is erroneously sustained does not render the error harmless where the issue was not submitted to the jury, although defendant failed to ask a peremptory instruction.

to stand which fully raised the issue;[50] the matter stated in the pleading was shown by the evidence to be without merit or foundation in fact;[51] or another plea to which no reply was made was established by the undisputed evidence and constituted a complete answer to the complaint.[52] If the matter pleaded in the reply to which the demurrer is erroneously sustained is matter not available under the general issue and might have benefited the pleader if established, the error is prejudicial.[53]

Rejoinder. Where matters asserted in a rejoinder merely raise an issue or issues already made by other pleadings, and defendant is permitted to make proof of matters alleged in the rejoinder, a ruling of the trial court sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to the rejoinder is harmless.[53.5]

Counterclaim or cross complaint. Sustaining a demurrer to a counterclaim or cross complaint is harmless provided appellant's rights are not prejudiced,[53.10] as where the matter set up therein could be shown or claimed under the answer,[54] the cause of action alleged has already been determined adversely to appellant,[55] appellant has fully presented his proof in support thereof,[56] the same facts were set up in the answer and decided adversely to appellant,[57] the matter set up in the counterclaim rested on a fact which the jury found did not exist,[58] the cross complainant makes admissions which establish that it has no foundation in fact,[59] a demurrer to a similar cross complaint by another defendant was overruled, and all of the issues raised thereby were determined by the findings of fact,[60] plaintiff remitted the full amount of the counterclaim,[61] or where the counteraction was such that it would have been stricken on motion if the demurrer was overruled as improperly raising the question.[61.5] If a counterclaim or cross action sets up a good claim and defendant cannot otherwise obtain the benefit thereof, the sustaining of a demurrer to the counterclaim or cross-action is prejudicial.[62]

b. To Part of Pleadings

Sustaining a demurrer to a part of a pleading, although error, is harmless where the pleader can avail himself of the same matters under the remaining part of the pleading, or otherwise, or he is nevertheless not entitled to prevail; but the error is not harmless if the matter available under the part demurred to is not available under the part which remains.

Error in sustaining a demurrer to a part of a pleading is harmless where the complaining party by reason of other parts of the same pleading,[63]

or otherwise,[64] obtains the same benefits or advantages that he would have had under that part of the pleading to which the demurrer was sustained; or the ultimate result would nevertheless have been the same, in that there are factors or elements in the case which definitely establish or show that the complaining party would not have been entitled to prevail on the part demurred to even had the demurrer been overruled.[65]

It has, however, been held that the principle that error in sustaining a demurrer to a part of a pleading is harmless if the matter pleaded is available under another part applies only where such matter appears to have been so availed of;[66] and error in sustaining a demurrer to a count or paragraph of the complaint,[67] or to a plea or paragraph of the answer,[68] will not be considered harmless where evidence admissible under the pleading to which the demurrer was sustained is not admissible under the part of the pleading which remains, the remaining counts of the complaint place an additional burden of proof on plaintiff,[69] or the theory of the part to which the demurrer was sustained differs from the theory advanced in the remaining part or parts.[70] The fact that the same questions are presented by exceptions to the conclusions of law does not render harmless error in sustaining a demurrer to a paragraph of the complaint.[71]

Petition or complaint. Sustaining a demurrer to a count or paragraph of a petition or complaint is harmless where there is another count or paragraph to which the demurrer is not sustained which is identical with,[72] or substantially the same as,[73] the remaining counts or paragraphs, or differs from the other paragraphs merely in anticipating the defense,[74] the paragraph or count of the complaint demurred or excepted to is not material to plaintiff's recovery,[75] another count to which a demurrer is properly sustained simply alleges the same cause of action more in detail and discloses that plaintiff would not be entitled to recover,[76] the evidence shows that the part to which the demurrer was sustained has no support in fact,[77] the count to which the demurrer is sustained is subsequently stricken on motion of plaintiff,[78] or where the finding of facts covers the subject matter of each paragraph of the complaint.[79]

A ruling sustaining a demurrer to a count of a complaint is not error without injury, however, where there is evidence supporting such count.[79.5] Where some counts of a complaint state a cause of action, the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend is error, although the complaint might be subject to special demurrers;[79.10] and even though some counts of a complaint may be duplicates of others, which latter counts are held good as against demurrers, the sustaining of demurrers to the former counts which state a cause of action is prejudicial to plaintiff.[79.15]

Plea or answer. Sustaining a demurrer to a part of a plea or answer has been held harmless where defendant receives the same benefit or advantage under a plea of general issue or general denial[80]

murrer, and no judgment was entered against him in the entry sustaining the demurrer,[92.5] where appellant takes leave to amend,[93] or withdraws the pleading to which the demurrer has been sustained.[94] Although plaintiff changes his cause of action by his amendment the error is still regarded as harmless if he is awarded the same amount as damages that he asked for in his original petition.[95]

An amended answer setting up the same defense as in the answer to which the demurrer was previously sustained has been regarded as a waiver of the error in sustaining the demurrer although that part of the answer is subsequently stricken;[96] but there is other authority for the view that a defendant to whose answer a demurrer has been erroneously sustained does not waive or cure the error by filing an amended answer.[97]

§ 1687(3). —— —— Overruling Demurrer or Exception

a. In general
b. To part of pleadings
c. Cure by amendment, abandonment, or pleading over

a. In General

Error in overruling a demurrer is harmless only where there are circumstances which show that the fact that the pleading was permitted to stand could have had no effect on the final result.

Quoted in: Fla.—S. H. Kress & Co. v. Powell, 180 So. 757, 763, 132 Fla. 471.

Error in overruling a demurrer or exception to a pleading is harmless where the complaining party is not injured or the final result is in no way affected by the fact that the pleading was permitted to stand against the demurrer.[98] This rule has been

In a real estate broker's action for a commission, the overruling of demurrer on the ground of his failure to allege that he had secured a license to engage in the brokerage business as required by statute, is not reversible error, it being presumed that, if no license had been issued, defendant would have proved such fact, instead of standing on a mere technicality, evidence thereof being available to defendant as well as to plaintiff.

Overruling an exception to a petition based on the fact that the allegations of the petition are too vague to justify the admission of evidence concerning the arrangement on which plaintiff bases his cause of action is ground for reversal where there was a judgment for plaintiff which can be justified only by the evidence introduced which was not properly admissible under the petition in its vague condition.

or misjoinder of parties,[20] or failure to state separately several causes of action,[21] is a harmless error where no substantial rights are affected.

Overruling a demurrer on the ground of misjoinder is reversible error, however, where substantial rights are affected,[21.5] and where demurrant stands on his demurrer.[22] Where a complaint fails to state a cause of action, and a demurrer on that ground is overruled, the error is prejudicial and ground for reversal if the record fails to show that in the subsequent trial the harm done was completely obviated,[23] the trial does not result in any record evidence of the fact essential to the plaintiff's right to maintain the action,[24] or the petition does not at all allege the matter shown at the trial to establish a right of recovery.[25] Overruling an exception or a demurrer to a petition on the ground that its allegations are too vague and indefinite to advise defendant of the charge made by plaintiff is prejudicial where defendant is thereby unduly burdened in preparing his defense,[26] and although a petition as amended sets out a cause of action, where the court errs in overruling a demurrer to one of the amendments, a judgment overruling all demurrers is required to be reversed.[26.5]

Plea or answer. Overruling a demurrer or exception to a plea or answer is harmless error where such ruling does not affect the substantial rights of demurrant.[26.10] This rule has been applied where plaintiff is not in any event entitled to recover,[27]

Cure of error

(1) Any error in overruling a demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action is cured by the court's subsequently sustaining a demurrer to the evidence as to all causes of action except one.
Okl.—Goldberg v. Willcox, 260 P. 777, 127 Okl. 263.

(2) The overruling of demurrer to complaint for misjoinder of causes of action and the denial of motion to compel plaintiff to elect upon which cause of action he would proceed, if error, is harmless, where the court in its instructions to the jury limited plaintiff's recovery, if any, to that sought only in one cause of action.

Unobjected to testimony showing unalleged fact

Where the petition fails to allege a fact, the existence of which is absolutely essential to his right to maintain the action, and a demurrer on that ground is erroneously overruled, the error is prejudicial and is not cured by the fact that plaintiff testifies to the existence of the necessary fact without objection from defendant for all proceedings subsequent to the overruling of the demurrer were nugatory.

or is entitled to recover irrespective of the matter set up in the answer,[28] where no relief was granted defendant on the answer,[28.5] where the evidence on the issue presented was freely admitted and the issue was submitted to the jury in favorable terms,[28.10] where the filing of the answer was unnecessary and defendant could have introduced all evidence which he did without filing the answer,[29] where all the facts are stipulated and a correct declaration or statement of the law as applied to the relevant facts stipulated can be made without regard to the sufficiency of the pleadings,[29.5] where the court gives correct instructions which cure the effect of the error,[30] where an affirmative charge is given for plaintiff which eliminates the plea,[31] where the error is cured by a verdict in favor of demurrant,[31.5] where the evidence shows without conflict that the matters set up in the pleading do not exist,[32] or where the plea or answer is not supported by the evidence.[33]

Error in overruling a demurrer based on failure of the answer sufficiently to specify certain matters referred to is harmless where plaintiff in fact knew exactly what was intended.[34] An appellate court will look to the whole record to determine whether overruling a demurrer to an answer resulted in harm to plaintiff.[34.5]

Error, however, in overruling a demurrer or exception to a plea or answer is prejudicial and ground for reversal where the record discloses that there is a probability that it affected or influenced the final result in the case,[35] or where it results in the injection of an improper issue in the case on which the verdict of the jury is expressly based.[36]

Replication or reply. Error in overruling a demurrer to a reply or replication is not prejudicial where proof of the facts therein set up can be made under the general denial or general replication,[37] the reply was eliminated from the case or not established,[38] defects in the replication were supplied by the evidence and the proper issues were submitted to the jury by appropriate instructions,[39] or defendant failed to establish the matter set up in his pleading which has brought forth the reply or replication to which the demurrer was directed,[40] the plea to which the replication is directed has been eliminated by demurrer,[41] or, under the record, defendant was nevertheless liable.[42] In a proper case there may be reversible error in overruling a demurrer to a replication.[42.5] Thus there may be reversible error in the overruling of a demurrer to a replication where the facts stated therein are not sufficient to establish plaintiff's case,[43] or where defendant is forced to take issue on allegations of replications which presented false issues.[43.5]

Cross action or counterclaim. Error in overruling a demurrer to a pleading in a cross action is harmless where the complaining party is not injured or the final result is in no way affected by the fact that the pleading was permitted to stand against the demurrer.[43.10] Thus, error in overruling a demurrer to a cross complaint, cross bill, or counterclaim is harmless where no evidence was introduced that could not have been introduced if the demurrer had been sustained,[44] or the matters pleaded in the cross petition were not submitted to the jury by the court's instructions,[45] or there is no finding or judgment in favor of the counterclaim or cross complaint,[46] or only nominal damages were allowed,[47] or where the failure to allege a matter with particularity resulted in no harm to the opposite party,[47.5] or complainant obtained all the relief to which he was entitled regardless of the cross bill,[48] or where it was rejected as surplusage.[49] If a cross petition against third persons is insufficient as a cross petition but sufficiently states a cause of action, the overruling of a demurrer thereto is harmless error where the third persons thereafter answer the cross petition and are given separate trials on the issues thus formed.[50]

Answer to cross complaint or reply. Error in overruling a demurrer to an answer to a cross complaint or reply may be harmless where both the

b. To Part of Pleadings

Reversal will be granted for error in overruling a demurrer or exception to a part of a pleading unless it affirmatively appears from the record that the appellant was not harmed by the ruling.

Error in overruling a demurrer or exception to part of a pleading will not be ground for reversal where it appears that no prejudice resulted therefrom.[51] This is the case where the judgment or verdict can be referred to a sufficient part of the pleading other than that part to which the demurrer overruled was interposed,[52] or the decision is for the complaining party on the issue raised by that part of the pleading to which the demurrer related.[53] In order, however, for error in overruling a demurrer to part of a pleading to be regarded as harmless it is necessary that the appellate court be able to see from the record that no prejudice did or could have resulted to appellant from the error,[54] and where the record leaves it possible that the judgment rests wholly,[55] or in part,[56] on a defective portion of a pleading to which a demurrer was interposed and was overruled, the judgment will be reversed.

Petition or complaint. Overruling a demurrer to a count or part of a petition or complaint is harmless where plaintiff could properly recover under other sufficient counts or parts,[57] as where similar allegations to those not sustained on demurrer appeared elsewhere in the petition but were not demurred to,[57.5] or the averments demurred to were immaterial and not essential to recovery,[58] or the allegation as a conclusion of the pleader is harmless in view of the evidence,[58.5] or no evidence was admitted which was not admissible under other counts of the declaration,[59] or where allegations in a petition excepted to by defendant in no way broadened the proof admissible under other allegations,[59.5] or the part to which the demurrer was directed is not supported by the evidence,[60] or is cured by a charge to the jury,[60.5] or is otherwise eliminated from the case so that the final result is in no way based thereon.[61]

Election of plaintiff to proceed on another count or part of pleading other than that demurred to.

Ga.—Reidsville, etc., R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S.E. 187, 13 Ga.App. 357.

It has been held that error in overruling a demurrer to a count on the ground of repugnancy in joining charges of wanton and simple negligence is not rendered harmless by the fact that the complaint contained two good counts charging simple negligence alone, where the bad count charging only wanton negligence was submitted to the jury as a good count based on wanton negligence.[62]

Plea or answer. With respect to pleas or answers it has been held that the overruling of a demurrer to one or more pleas or paragraphs of an answer will not constitute reversible error where the facts set up were provable under other parts of the pleadings;[63] the judgment was based on other pleas[64] or paragraphs,[65] or no evidence was admitted in support of the plea;[66] or defendant was entitled to the general charge upon other pleas;[67] or there was no evidence to support the counts of the complaint to which the pleas were addressed;[68] or the court failed to submit any issue as to the allegations of the plea or paragraph;[69] or where the finding was in favor of plaintiff.[70]

On the other hand, in a proper case there may be reversible error in overruling a special demurrer to an answer.[70.5] Thus, in the absence of the charge of the lower court, where such court improperly Jury instructed not to consider evidence on issues raised by part of pleading demurred to.

Matter set up must constitute good defense

(1) If the matter stated in the plea or paragraph of the answer to which the demurrer is erroneously overruled does not constitute a legal defense, the error is prejudicial and ground for reversal, although proof of the matter alleged in the bad paragraph would be admissible under another.

Ind.—Allen Realty Co. v. Uhler, 146 N.E. 766, 83 Ind.App. 103.

(2) "In other words, if a demurrer is overruled to a plea which imperfectly sets up a good defense, provable under the general issue, the special plea being bad because of form, rather than substance, and proof of the facts averred would establish a good defense, provable under the good plea, the overruling of the demurrer to said defective plea could not be injurious; but, if the trial court overrules a demurrer to a plea defective in substance, that is, the facts set up did not constitute a legal defense, the error could not be without injury, notwithstanding the facts so set up were provable under a good plea in the case, for the reason that the defendant would be entitled to a judgment upon proof of a plea which did not set up a complete legal defense."

overruled a special demurrer to a paragraph of the answer, an appellate court may not determine that the error was harmless because the issue was assertedly withdrawn from the jury.[70.10]

c. Cure by Amendment, Abandonment, or Pleading Over

The fact that the pleading demurred to has been amended or abandoned, or the party has pleaded over, may render harmless an error in overruling a demurrer.

Error in overruling a demurrer is harmless where the pleading is amended,[71] or could have been amended had the demurrer been sustained,[71.5] to obviate the objection, or is abandoned or withdrawn at the trial;[72] and where the party pleads over, the objection is waived.[73] Where the trial court gives no instructions under certain paragraphs of defendant's pleadings, plaintiff is not prejudiced by overruling his general demurrer to such paragraphs, and the appellate court will not discuss the question whether the trial court erred in such rulings.[73.5]

§ 1687(4). —— —— Errors of Practice with Relation to Demurrers or Exceptions

Errors in practice with respect to ruling or not ruling on demurrers or exceptions are not ground for reversal where no substantial rights have been adversely affected.

In the absence of prejudice resulting therefrom, errors in practice with respect to a demurrer or an exception will not be ground for reversal,[74] as

Pendente lite ruling
(1) Rule of practice making a ruling on demurrer a pendente lite ruling if exceptions pendente lite are certified and filed by demurrant is not prejudicial to demurrant, since ruling is harmless in the event of a judgment in demurrant's favor and since a review of the ruling on demurrer may be had by assigning error on the exceptions pendente lite in a direct bill of exceptions to final judgment in event of an adverse judgment.
Ga.—Smith v. Barksdale, 35 S.E.2d 149, 199 Ga. 723.
(2) Where pendente lite ruling on a demurrer in no way affected the merits of the case, reversible error would not be predicated thereon.
Ga.—Dye v. Richards, 81 S.E.2d 820, 210 Ga. 601.
Special exception as general demurrer
Action of trial court in treating special exception as general demurrer and dismissing cause may in unusual cases be classified as harmless error.

where a correct result was reached in ruling on the pleadings, although the demurrer sustained was defective,[75] or was not the appropriate remedy,[76] although a motion to strike was filed simultaneously with a demurrer,[77] or although the court failed to designate the ground of demurrer sustained as required by statute,[78] or to change the date of the order on the demurrer to the proper date.[79] Entering judgment on demurrer to an amended replication, without first disposing of an issue raised by demurrer to the original replication, will not be ground for reversal where no prejudice results.[80] If apparent justice has been done, error of the court, in proceeding to trial without amendment of the pleadings after a demurrer thereto has been properly sustained, will be considered harmless.[81] Error of the court in ruling on special demurrer to a pleading after a general demurrer thereto has been sustained is, likewise, harmless.[82]

Although the failure to pass on apparently meritorious demurrers before proceeding to trial may give rise to reversible error,[83] failure to pass on a demurrer is harmless where no substantial prejudice to appellant results,[84] as where the demurrer is without merit,[85] the court rules on another demurrer which covers the main points urged in the demurrer not ruled on,[86] or the opposite party is entitled, as a matter of law, to judgment;[87] and failure to rule on a demurrer to a plea of non assumpsit, in an action of debt, is not prejudicial where defendant thereafter filed a plea of nil debet in place thereof, since, had the court ruled, it would doubtless have permitted defendant to plead over.[88] Also, failure of the court to rule on a plea and demurrer until after the jury are sworn is a mere irregularity having no prejudicial effect as to either party and does not constitute reversible error.[88.5]

Hearing on wrong day

Although the court has erroneously sustained a demurrer to a petition on a day when its rules do not permit a hearing, the error will be regarded as harmless where the petition does not state sufficient facts to entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded.

88.5 W.Va.—Riley v. West Virginia Northern R. Co., 51 S.E.2d 119, 132

Defendant may not complain of the imposition of terms, on leave to answer on his demurrer being overruled, where he participated in the proceedings and trial, offering evidence and presenting his claims by counsel, thus having practically the same advantages as if answer had been filed.[89] If the court in overruling a demurrer to the petition conditions the same on plaintiff's filing a copy of the instrument on which the suit is based, plaintiff's failure to comply with this condition cannot be urged as reversible error by defendant, where he, in his answer, refers to such instrument and admits its existence.[90]

The fact that a demurrer is sustained and the case dismissed without leave to amend does not constitute reversible error in the absence of a request or application by plaintiff for permission to amend,[91] or where the defect is with respect to a matter that could not have been amended;[92] and plaintiff may not complain that the failure to notify him of the sustaining of a demurrer to a complaint deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to ask leave to amend, where it does not appear that he lacked actual notice of the making of the order and a sufficient time elapsed before entry of the judgment.[92.5]

Where a general demurrer is sustained without leave to amend the petition to meet special exceptions, the judgment must be reversed unless the general demurrer was properly sustained.[92.10] The fact that a demurrer is sustained without leave to amend does not constitute reversible error where the proposed amendment would not have cured the defect.[92.15] Where a defendant is not liable, it is immaterial that a court sustained a special demurrer of defendant instead of his general demurrer.[92.20]

does not make a very wide departure from the matter set up in the original pleading.[97]

Error in refusing to compel an amendment will not constitute ground for reversal where no prejudice resulted therefrom,[98] and a refusal to require plaintiff to amend immediately when the amendment is held essential is not prejudicial where defendant was not required to proceed until after the amendment was filed within the statutory period, and was then permitted to introduce evidence admissible under a special plea to the amended pleading.[99]

Requiring an amendment to a complaint which adds nothing to its legal effect nor increases plaintiff's burden is harmless error.[1]

Failure to obtain leave to amend will not warrant a reversal where the party was entitled to amend,[2] and it is not reversible error to permit a trial upon an amended complaint filed without leave, and after the time had expired, where defendant was in no way misled thereby.[3]

Moving in the presence of the jury at the conclusion of plaintiff's case in chief for leave to amend the complaint so as to increase the amount sued for may be prejudicial error, where the jury returned the full amount demanded, and substantial evidence supported the position of defendant.[3.5]

b. Permitting Amendment

Error in permitting an amendment is harmless where the complaining party is not prejudiced thereby, as where the other pleadings are sufficient to sustain the result, or the matter set up by amendment in no way enters into the verdict or judgment.

Error in allowing an amendment is often held harmless where the complaining party is not prejudiced by the ruling of the court,[3.50] as where it simply makes the pleadings conform to the proof;[4]

no attempt was made to prove the matters set up in the amendment;[12] or the matter set up in the amendment was legally insufficient,[13] or the judgment rendered ignored the amendment,[14] the amendment was not in fact made,[15] or was withdrawn or stricken;[16] or the issue sought to be raised by an amended pleading was not submitted to the jury;[17] or the case was tried on the issues made by the original pleading;[18] or the verdict or judgment was in favor of the opposite party with respect to the matter set up in the amendment;[19] or, after the sustaining of a demurrer to the amended pleading, the party, by leave of court, filed a new pleading which superseded the amended pleading.[20]

If permitting an amendment to a petition has prejudiced defendant because of his failure to file an answer to the new matter, the prejudice is avoided by plaintiff's agreeing that the original answer shall be considered as a denial of all the facts contained in the amended petition.[21] Granting an amendment at the trial is not harmful where the other party was in no way misled or surprised,[22] or had ample opportunity to overcome his surprise, if any,[23] or was not prejudiced,[23.5] or was offered a continuance which he declined,[24] or was offered a right to renew his plea of surprise at the end of the trial, but the plea was not renewed.[24.5] Defendant may not maintain that permitting an amendment to a petition after submission to the jury deprived him of his right to trial by jury where he had a trial by jury on at least every issue which it was desired to have so tried;[25] nor is it reversible error to grant an amendment without notice where the amendment is again allowed on a motion made on notice.[26] An amendment which corrects a clerical error in a pleading is harmless,[27] as is an amendment recognizing a change of parties,[28] particularly where the complaining party has been offered additional time in which to plead, which he refused.[29]

However, error in permitting an amendment is reversible where the amendment is demurrable or subject to objection and there has been a verdict or judgment thereon adverse to the complaining party,[30] or the error in allowing the amendment adversely affects the further trial of the case,[31] or where the cause of action originally set up is not supported by the evidence and the amendment sets up an entirely different cause of action.[32] Also, error in permitting an amendment to the petition instead of requiring a supplemental petition to bring forth additional claims that have fallen due since the institution of the suit has been held ground for reversal;[33] but other authority has held such an error nonprejudicial where the recovery on the matter set up in the amendment is at the same rate as the recovery allowed on the original petition.[34]

c. Refusing to Allow Amendment

An erroneous refusal to allow an amendment is prejudicial only where the benefit of the matter proposed to be set up in the amendment cannot otherwise be obtained and a different result might have been reached had the amendment been allowed.

A refusal to permit an amended pleading to be filed, although technically erroneous, is harmless error if on the whole case the rights of the complaining party are not prejudiced.[34.50] Thus a refusal to permit an amendment is harmless where the party seeking the amendment in some other way has the benefit of the matter which he wanted to set up in the amendment,[35] as by other pleadings which suf-

the complaint[43] or answer[44] would still have been fatally defective, or, notwithstanding the amendment, there could have been no verdict or judgment with respect thereto for the party asking it under the proof.[45]

Refusal to grant leave to amend at a proper time is prejudicial error and ground for reversal where the complaining party cannot otherwise obtain the benefit of the matter sought to be set up and might have prevailed had the amendment been allowed;[46] and particularly is this true where the proposed amendment does not radically change the original issues, the other party is not taken by surprise or his rights jeopardized, and the granting of the amendment would have been in furtherance of justice.[47]

d. Allowing or Refusing Supplemental Pleadings

Where no substantial rights are adversely affected by the ruling, permitting or refusing to permit the filing of supplemental pleadings is not cause for reversal.

availed the pleader nothing,[55] as where the pleading is legally insufficient,[56] or there was no evidence to support it,[57] or the facts which are necessary to sustain it are established to be otherwise by the undisputed evidence[58] or the findings of the jury.[59] Failure to give the pleader notice of a motion to strike his pleading before sustaining it is harmless error where the pleader subsequently has full hearing on the merits of the question involved.[60]

Sustaining a motion to strike is, however, harmful where the party is thereby erroneously deprived of substantial benefits under the pleading, and the final result might have been different had the pleading been permitted to stand.[61]

It seems to be well settled in some states that ground for reversal cannot be predicated on error of the court in overruling or denying a motion to strike, where the moving party has a further adequate remedy by objecting to the testimony and requesting a proper charge or instruction.[62] Apart from this, a refusal to strike a pleading is harmless where the matter pleaded therein is disregarded or not taken into consideration,[63] or the complaining party would not have been entitled to prevail even had the pleading been stricken,[64] or he is accorded all the advantages he would have acquired by having the motion sustained,[65] or the verdict or decision is for the moving party with respect to those matters raised by the pleading sought to be stricken,[66] or the facts alleged could properly have been incorporated in another pleading by way of amendment,[67] or are sufficiently covered in, and provable under, another pleading to which the motion was not directed.[68] Refusal to strike a cross complaint is harmless where the complaint is subsequently dismissed leaving only the issues formed by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto;[69] and error in refusing to strike a complaint for misjoinder of two causes of action is harmless where there is recovery on only one cause of action.[70]

The fact that a motion to strike was not the proper remedy will not authorize a reversal for striking out a pleading, where the correct result was reached,[71] or the pleader was accorded the same rights as if the correct procedure had been followed.[72] of the court relates to parts of pleadings which are surplusage, immaterial, irrelevant,[74] or argumentative,[74.5] or averments of evidential facts.[75]

Reinstatement of a stricken paragraph of complaint setting forth notes evidencing a claim in suit is not reversible error where the correct conclusion and judgment were reached by the court.[76]

(2) Sustaining Motion to Strike

Sustaining a motion to strike part of a pleading, although erroneous, is ground for reversal only when the complaining party cannot otherwise avail himself of the benefit of the portion stricken and he might have obtained a more favorable result had it been permitted to stand.

The erroneous sustaining of a motion to strike a part of a pleading, although erroneous, is harmless where the party against whom the motion is sustained nevertheless has the benefit of the matters set up in the portion so stricken,[77] as where the facts therein alleged are admissible or available under the remaining parts of the pleading,[78] or he is the order striking the pleading is subsequently revoked;[81] or both parties treated the case as if the matter alleged in the pleading stricken was an issue.[82]

The rule has likewise been applied where the error is cured or corrected,[83] as by the verdict;[83.5] or where the final result in the case would have been the same even had the stricken portion of the pleading been permitted to stand,[84] as because the matter alleged in the stricken portion of the pleading was shown or found to have no support in fact,[85] or could not as a matter of law support a recovery[86] or constitute a defense;[87] or where the verdict or decision is based on an issue other than that raised by the part of the pleadings stricken;[88] or the variance between the part stricken and the other parts of the pleading was such that it would have in any event been necessary for the pleader to amend;[89] or the pleading or part of pleading of the adverse party to which the portion stricken related was eliminated from the case or did not enter into the final result.[90] Technical error committed in striking matter does not prejudice a party where he is given ample time within which to amend.[91]

The erroneous sustaining of a motion to strike a part of a pleading is, however, prejudicial where the party against whom the motion is sustained cannot otherwise avail himself of the matter stricken and he might have obtained a favorable result thereon.[92] Hence, error resulting from the striking out of a count of a complaint is not cured by the retention and submission of another count setting forth different issues;[93] and, where the issue which the party attempted to get before the jury by his pleading was not considered by the jury, the error in striking out the plea is not harmless,[94] although he may have been permitted to introduce evidence with respect to the issue.[95]

While the subsequent filing of an amendment has been held a waiver of prior error in striking portions of a pleading,[96] the fact that plaintiff was permitted to amend and to refile a count of his complaint does not cure the error where the special breach assigned in the amendment was also stricken out by the court;[97] and it has been held that the filing of a substitute answer does not operate as a waiver of exceptions to an order of the court striking out an affirmative defense in the original answer.[98] The fact that other allegations similar to those stricken remained in the pleading has been considered not to render the error harmless where the remaining allegations were even more subject to the same objections as the allegations stricken and not so specific or definite.[99]

(3) Denying Motion to Strike

A denial of a motion to strike portions of a pleading, although erroneous, is not ground for reversal when no prejudice has resulted therefrom; but the denial of a motion to strike unnecessary, redundant, and irrelevant allegations is ground for reversal if their retention in the pleading tends to prejudice the moving party in the trial of the cause.

The denying or overruling of a motion to strike portions of a pleading, even when erroneous, is not ground for reversal when no prejudice has resulted therefrom;[1] and, as pointed out in § 1689 a, in some jurisdictions it appears to be the settled rule that error in refusing to strike improper allegations or portions of a pleading is not one on which ground for reversal can be predicated where the moving party can later raise the same objection by objecting to the testimony and requesting a proper charge or instruction.

In addition, such an error is harmless and nonprejudicial where the portions of the pleading to which the motion was directed are subsequently eliminated from the case,[2] as by abandonment or withdrawal,[3] or not being taken into consideration,[4] or the opposite party's failure to introduce proof in support of the allegations sought to be stricken;[5] or the portion of the pleading objected to is a mere of defense is reversible error where the jury could have found for defendant on no other ground;[19] and error in refusing to strike a division of the answer alleging affirmative defenses elsewhere properly pleaded is prejudicial where the court also dismissed a count of the petition which such division answered, although such dismissal should not have been entered.[20]

If a reply sets up a new and different cause of action from that alleged in the petition, refusal to strike the objectionable allegations of the reply as constituting a departure is reversible error;[21] and, where the court's failure to strike out part of a complaint because of misjoinder of parties and causes of action results in a larger verdict being rendered against the moving defendant than could properly be rendered on the only cause of action sustainable against him, the error is ground for reversal.[22]

In a proper case denial of a motion to strike allegations of a replication may constitute reversible error.[22.5]

§ 1690. —— Motion to Dismiss

In the absence of resulting prejudice, error in sustaining or denying a motion to dismiss is harmless.

Error in sustaining[23] or denying[24] a motion to dismiss will not be ground for reversal where no prejudice resulted from the ruling. The dismissal of a pleading is not prejudicial where the pleader could be afforded the same relief under other pleadings,[25] or the facts on which it is based are found not to exist;[26] and error in dismissing a pleading is cured by a subsequent order setting aside the original order of dismissal.[27]

Dismissal of a pleading is prejudicial where the pleader is thereby deprived of a substantial right,[28] as where a pleading is dismissed for want of supporting evidence and evidence offered in support thereof is erroneously excluded,[29] or the pleading is dismissed on the ground that it is not sufficiently specific when the court could, on proper motion, have required the pleading to be made more specific.[30] Refusal to dismiss a petition which fails to state a cause of action may be reversible error, although the cause of action subsequently accrues.[31]

§ 1691. —— Motion to Make More Definite and Certain

Facts fully known to movant

(1) Where it appears that the moving party had knowledge of the facts which would have been disclosed had the motion to make more definite and certain been sustained, the overruling of the same is harmless error.

Iowa.—McManus v. Mullin, 165 N.W. 58.

(2) If defendant by conditional examination of plaintiff before trial has become fully informed of the matters involved, it is not reversible error to overrule his motion to have the complaint made more specific.

Ind.—Cline v. Rodabaugh, 179 N.E. 6, 97 Ind.App. 258.

(3) Error of the trial court in failing to require plaintiff to amend his complaint to state the particulars of the accident more clearly, is not reversible error, where the answer supplied all defects in complaint in that respect.

Ariz.—Calumet & Arizona Mining Co. v. Chambers, 176 P. 839, 20 Ariz. 54.

(4) Overruling of motion to make complaint more specific was not prejudicial where defendant raised specific question to which motion was directed by answer.

Ind.—Abraham Lincoln Life Ins. Co. v. Meore, 2 N.E.2d 223, 102 Ind. App. 412.

(5) Overruling of motion to make complaint more specific was not reversible error, where defendant was not misled as to issues presented, and was sufficiently advised of nature and character of charges to be met, and was not deprived of any defenses to cause of action.

Ind.—Town of Frankton v. Closser, 20 N.E.2d 216, 107 Ind.App. 193.

Insufficient part withdrawn or stricken

(1) The overruling of a motion to have a part of a pleading made more specific is harmless where such part is subsequently stricken or withdrawn.

Ind.—Cook & Bernheimer Co. v. Hagedorn, 131 N.E. 788, 82 Ind.App. 444.

Kan.—Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank of Wakefield v. Goe, 202 P. 835, 110 Kan. 65.

(2) Where request for damages was the only item which could be regarded as a separate cause of action, and, where damage request was abandoned during trial and no evidence was offered on it, overruling of defendants' motion to require plaintiffs separately to state and number their causes of action and to make petition more definite and certain was not reversible error.

Kan.—Simpson v. Goering, 170 P.2d 831, 161 Kan. 558.

Movant able to present case adequately notwithstanding denial of motion

Denying a motion to make a petition for conversion more definite and certain by listing the names and prices of books, listed as miscellaneous, is not reversible error, where defendant's expert witnesses heard plaintiff's testimony regarding the names and value of books referred to as miscellaneous and gave testimony as to the value thereof.

Okl.—Hodges v. Reynolds, 40 P.2d 1025, 170 Okl. 345.

Final decision in favor of movant renders harmless error in overruling his motion to have a pleading made more specific.

Ind.—Pivot City Realty Co. v. State Savings & Trust Co., 162 N.E. 27, 88 Ind.App. 222.

if the moving party is thereby prevented from having sufficient information of the claims of his opponent adequately to prepare or present his case.[34]

Failure of a party to comply with an order requiring him to make a portion of his pleading more specific is harmless if the issues raised by such portion are not litigated on the trial.[35]

§ 1692. —— Motion for Bill of Particulars

If there has been no substantial injury to the rights of the complaining party, error in sustaining or denying a motion for a bill of particulars is not ground for reversal.

The granting[36] or denial[37] of a motion for a bill of particulars, although erroneous, will not constitute a ground for reversal where no substantial injury results therefrom.

§ 1693. —— Compelling or Refusing to Compel Election

Where the error does not enter into the final result or adversely affect the substantial rights of the complaining party, error in compelling or refusing to compel an election between different matters set up in a pleading is harmless.

Requiring an election between several causes of actions, counts, or defenses is not prejudicial error where appellant is not deprived of the benefit of any material fact[38] or any issue on which he could

Unnecessary or immaterial allegations

(1) Refusal to require unnecessary or immaterial allegations to be made more specific is harmless error.

Premier Motor Mfg. Co. v. Tilford, 111 N.E. 645, 61 Ind.App. 164.

(2) Thus the overruling of a motion to make allegations of complaint not constituting a necessary part of the statement of the cause of action more specific is not reversible error.

Ind.—Cincinnati, I. & W. R. Co. v. Little, 131 N.E. 762, 190 Ind. 662.

Verdict based on part to which motion not directed

Overruling a motion to have one paragraph of a complaint made more definite and certain is harmless where the verdict is based on a different paragraph of the complaint.

Contributory negligence

In action for injuries where court ordered defendant to file amended answer making answer setting up contributory negligence more definite, and defendant stated that it did "forego the filing of its plea of contributory negligence which it wished to set up," failure to set up plea of contributory negligence did not prejudice defendant, since, if evidence disclosed contributory negligence under general denial such facts could be relied on by defendant and if necessary answer could be amended to conform to the evidence during progress of trial.

Contentions of appellant admitted

Overruling a motion for a bill of particulars is harmless where appellant's contentions with reference to the matter on which the bill is sought are admitted by appellee upon the trial.

Va.—Keister's Ex'rs v. Philips' Ex'x, supra.

Failure to indicate information desired in demand for a bill of particulars will cause it to be presumed that the failure to obtain a bill of particulars was not prejudicial.

Power of court to consolidate

(1) Where a number of parties sue for damages growing out of the breach of identical contracts all made with defendant at the same time, each party's cause of action being alleged in a separate count, the overruling of defendant's motion to require plaintiffs to elect to dismiss as to all except one of them is not prejudicial where the court in its discretion might have consolidated the actions had they been separately brought.
Ark.—Earl v. Ellison, 210 S.W. 342, 138 Ark. 166.

(2) The refusal to compel an election between causes of action for false imprisonment and for damages for unlawfully shackling a convict laborer is not prejudicial where by statute the court may consolidate causes of like nature when it appears reasonable to do so.

Trial to court without jury

Error in refusing to compel plaintiff to elect whether he would rely on the cause of action for the reasonable value of an automobile, or on one for an agreed value, is not prejudicial where the trial was before the court without a jury and the evidence disclosed no dispute as to the value agreed on and the promise of defendant to pay the same, as it will be assumed that the court under the evidence eliminated the first cause of action and entered judgment on the second.

offers no evidence to establish the other counts or defenses;[45] or where the court, after hearing the evidence, eliminates one of the counts[46] or submits only one issue to the jury;[47] or the original pleading which contains the several parts is superseded by an amended pleading at the trial;[48] or a plaintiff who has moved to compel defendant to elect between different parts of the latter's answer fails to establish his case;[49] or a verdict resulted against defendant, as a matter of law, on one count, and no judgment went against him as to the other.[50]

On the other hand, where the rights of the complaining party were prejudiced thereby, requiring,[50.5] or failing to require,[50.10] an election constitutes reversible error.

§ 1694. Issues, Proof, and Variance

Unless a variance between pleading and proof is material and such as misleads or prejudices the appellant, it is not ground for reversal; a similar rule applies where trial is in part on an immaterial issue.

While a reversal may be had if there has been a total failure to prove the matter alleged in the pleading,[51] or a material variance between pleading and proof having an apparent tendency to mislead or prejudice appellant,[52] mere variances which have

Dismissal before submission to jury
Error, if any, in overruling a motion to require plaintiff to elect to go to trial on either the first and third paragraphs of his complaint or on the second paragraph is rendered harmless by plaintiff's dismissal of the first and second paragraphs before submission of the case to the jury.

not misled appellant or adversely affected his substantial rights are usually not regarded as sufficiently prejudicial to afford grounds for reversal.[58] Variances ordinarily falling in this latter category

Proof of damages not pleaded

The reception of evidence of special damages not specially pleaded over the objection of defendant is prejudicial error when it cannot be determined whether or not any such damages were allowed by the jury.

been,[56] or are capable of being,[57] cured by amendment in accordance with the rules stated in § 1895 infra. Factors or circumstances often regarded as showing that the variance is harmless are that there has been a full trial on the merits without appellant objecting, expressing surprise at, or asking a continuance because of, the variance;[58] or that he was fully apprised of the issues to be tried and given ample opportunity to present his case;[59] or that he in fact showed himself to be able to meet the varying proof with contradicting evidence.[60]

It is, of course, apparent that no harm has resulted from the variance if the issue or matter to which the variant proof related has in some manner been eliminated or restricted so as not to enter into the final verdict or judgment.[61] Failure to make proof of unnecessary and immaterial allegations of a pleading is harmless and not ground for reversal,[62]

Holding held erroneous
Where defendant's exception did not expressly attack in limine litis plaintiff's allegations that he was elector and as such entitled to bring suit to prevent enforcement of ordinance prohibiting sale of beverages of high alcoholic content, holding that such fact was not adequately proved was erroneous and prejudicial.
La.—White v. Morehouse Parish Police Jury, App., 95 So.2d 356.

as is also failure to make proof of allegations not entering into the trial court's decision,[63] or facts which have been admitted by the opposing party.[64]

The fact that the trial is partly on an erroneous or immaterial issue will not work a reversal of a judgment against defendant, when such issue was brought in by defendant's plea on which plaintiff joined issue, the case was tried also on other material and valid issues, and the rights of defendant were not prejudiced.[65]

4. Interlocutory Proceedings

§ 1695. In General

A case will not be reversed because of harmless error in interlocutory proceedings.

Interlocutory orders, although erroneous, which do not prejudice the rights of the party against whom they are made, are insufficient to reverse a cause.[66] For example, although a consolidation of causes may have been technically erroneous, the judgment will not be reversed on this account where the consolidation does not appear to have been in any way prejudicial to the rights of the complaining party.[67]

Bonds. Orders with respect to bonds, although erroneous, which do not prejudice the rights of the party against whom they are made do not furnish grounds for reversal.[67.5] So, where the cause is decided against him, defendant cannot complain that plaintiff failed to furnish the required bond,[67.10] or that plaintiff's bond was irregular[68] or insufficient;[69] nor will the verdict and judgment be set aside on appeal by plaintiff for error of the court in requiring him to give additional security in the action by increasing the penalty of the bond.[70]

Physical examination. The denial of a timely motion for the physical examination of plaintiff may constitute reversible error.[70.5]

§ 1696. Continuance

a. In general
b. Amendment of pleadings
c. Absence of witness
d. Absence of counsel

a. In General

Granting or refusing a continuance is not reversible error where the complaining party is not prejudiced thereby.

Any error in continuing, or refusing to continue, a cause is not ground for reversal where no substantial rights of the party objecting are affected thereby.[71] Accordingly, where the issue which the moving party claimed he was not ready to try was found in his favor,[72] or where no testimony was in-

Error cured

Where alleged abuse of discretion in denial of continuance was cured by subsequent proceedings, alleged error was without prejudice.
Colo.—Boyer v. Boyer, 175 P.2d 92, 115 Colo. 429.

Absence of party

(1) A reasonable excuse for a party's absence will not require a reversal of order denying continuance on ground of absence where no prejudice is shown.
Tex.—Erback v. Donald, Civ.App., 170 S.W.2d 289, error refused.

(2) Denial of continuance on ground party was ill and unable to appear at trial was not reversible error where party did in fact appear and testified in his own behalf.
Cal.—Fejer v. Paonessa, 231 P.2d 507, 104 C.A.2d 190.
Tex.—Sherman v. Stein, Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 732, error refused.

(3) Fact that one denied continuance because of his absence was deprived of the right to aid in selecting a jury was immaterial, where the court directed a verdict.
Tex.—Costley v. Chapman, Civ.App., 262 S.W. 543.

Evidence of good defense

In an action to set aside a judgment denying continuance requested to secure evidence that plaintiff had a good defense in the original action, is not prejudicial, where no equitable reason for not presenting such defense in the original action was established.
Tex.—Dickinson v. Comstock, Civ. App., 199 S.W. 863.

Taking of deposition

Where the taking of a deposition of any one witness necessitated a continuance, no prejudice could possibly result because in the time granted by the continuance a cumulative deposition was also taken.
Iowa.—Robinson v. Hawkeye Commercial Men's Ass'n, 171 N.W. 118, 186 Iowa 759.

Withdrawal of issue

Denying a continuance because of the adversary's having withdrawn an allegation and eliminated an issue is not prejudicial error.
Iowa.—State v. Carney, 217 N.W. 472, 208 Iowa 133.

72. Tex.—Joy v. Fakes Furniture & Carpet Co., Civ.App., 286 S.W. 611. 4 C.J. p 947 note 17.

No recovery

Refusal to grant an intervener a continuance after plaintiff had been permitted to amend the complaint so as to ask damages against the intervener was not ground for reversal, troduced by the opposite party on the issue which the moving party claimed that he was unprepared to try,[73] or where the party obtained all the relief to which his pleadings entitled him,[74] no prejudicial error results in refusing to grant a continuance. On the other hand, erroneous refusal to grant a continuance will afford ground for reversal where substantial rights are prejudiced thereby.[74.5] Where the court refused to grant a continuance until after a decision of a case involving similar issues had been reached, it was held that the denial of the continuance was prejudicial error, entitling appellant to a retrial in order to determine the effect of the final decision in the other case.[75]

Refusal of a continuance on account of matters arising during the progress of the trial is harmless error when no surprise or injury is shown.[76]

b. Amendment of Pleadings

Refusal to grant a continuance because of an amendment to the pleadings is not ground for reversal where no harm results.

The failure or refusal of the court to grant a continuance because of an amendment to the pleadings, if error, is not a ground for reversal where no prejudice results.[76.50] So, refusal of a continuance for such reason, if error, is harmless where the amendment does not change, but merely amplifies, the original petition,[77] where the issue introduced by the amendment is not submitted to the jury,[78] where the judgment was not predicated on the issue introduced by the amendment,[79] where the amendment was unnecessary,[80] where it is apparent from the evidence introduced under the amended petition that there was no new and different cause of action,[81] or where the change by amendment is merely immaterial.[82] On the other hand, error in refusing to grant a continuance because of an amendment to the pleadings may afford grounds for reversal where prejudice results.[82.5]

c. Absence of Witness

Error in granting or refusing a continuance because of the absence of a witness, if not prejudicial, is not ground for reversal.

In accordance with the general rule discussed supra subdivision a of this section, error in granting[82.50] or refusing[82.55] a continuance because of the absence of a witness, if not prejudicial, is not ground for reversal. So, error in refusing a continuance because of the absence of a witness is not prejudicial where his testimony is merely cumula-where no judgment for damages was rendered against the intervener.

Similar evidence under original petition

Where a wife's original petition for divorce alleged that defendant was adjudged guilty of adultery in a former suit for divorce brought by him, and hence was estopped to deny the fact, and substantial evidence of his guilt was received without objection, defendant was not prejudiced by refusal of a continuance for surprise when the petition was amended by interlineation embodying such charge directly.

tive;[83] where the witness appears and testifies before the close of the trial;[84] where the testimony expected from the absent witness is otherwise put into evidence, as by deposition,[85] a written statement,[86] a written certificate,[87] or deed,[88] at least where it did not appear that greater benefit would have been obtained from the oral testimony of the absent witness;[89] where every fact which the witness would testify to is shown by the evidence offered by the opposite party;[90] where it is admitted that the witness if present would swear to the facts set out in the affidavit for continuance;[91] where the facts which it is claimed that the witness would testify to are admitted to exist by the opposite party;[92] or where the witness had testified on a former trial and such testimony was admitted by agreement and was to the same effect that the application stated that he would testify.[93]

It is likewise true that error in refusing a continuance because of the absence of a witness is not prejudicial where the testimony of the witness could not change the result;[94] where the affidavit of the absent witness produced on a motion for new trial showed that his testimony would not have been of material benefit to the party moving for a continuance;[95] where it appeared that the absent witness subsequently died;[96] where the request is for a continuance until the following day and the witness does not then appear;[97] or the trial did not close until the following day;[98] where it was shown that the witness had no personal knowledge of the transaction in suit;[99] where the disposition of the case rendered the absence of the witness immaterial;[1] where the court in refusing a continuance because of the absence of a witness directed the witnesses to be summoned to appear on the next day to which time the case was adjourned, it not appearing that the witness did not appear in obedience to

Party as witness
In an action for partition, where a party was present and testified fully on the second day of the trial, any error in refusing to her continuance on the ground that she could not be present through illness, although she was a necessary witness, was harmless, it not appearing that her cause suffered because she was not present during examination of two of her witnesses on the first day of trial.

the summons;[2] or where no diligence was used to procure the testimony of the witness.[3]

On the other hand, where the refusal to grant a continuance because of the absence of a witness results in prejudicial error, the case may be reversed for such reason.[4] Accordingly, where the moving party has used due diligence to obtain evidence, the materiality of which is apparent, and has been unable to obtain it in time for trial, a refusal of the continuance to enable the moving party to obtain the evidence is reversible error.[5]

d. Absence of Counsel

Error in a refusal to grant a continuance because of the absence of one of the attorneys is not ground for reversal where no harm results.

Error in refusing to continue a cause because of the absence of one of several of the attorneys of either plaintiff or defendant is not reversible where no substantial rights of the party objecting are affected.[6] Also a denial of a continuance because of the absence of associate counsel will not authorize a reversal when the attorney present was a witness and the case was tried without a jury and all the defenses were presented.[7]

§ 1697. Venue

Error in granting or denying a change of venue, if not prejudicial to the complaining party, is not ground for reversal.

Reference to failure to testify

That defendant was prejudiced by the refusal to postpone or to allow a reading of an affidavit of what the absent witness, defendant's only eyewitness, would testify, is indicated by reference, in closing argument of plaintiff's counsel, to his failure to testify.

Defaulting codefendant

A codefendant defaulting was not injured by a failure to serve him with a copy of plaintiff's controverting affidavit before the hearing on a plea of privilege.
Tex.—Pope v. Litwin, Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 1105.

a change of venue to defendant without hearing evidence for and against such change, where plaintiff's own pleadings show it should be granted,[9] or refusing a change of venue where no motion therefor was made,[10] is not ground for reversal. Error in denying a motion for change of venue is also harmless where the judgment was clearly for the right party,[11] or where, after a mistrial, the party made no further motion for change of venue before a second trial;[12] and permitting the correction of a clerical mistake in certifying the transcript on a change of venue is not prejudicial in the absence of surprise or injury.[13] Granting a change of venue to a defendant is harmless error where he was entitled to a peremptory instruction;[14] and failure to submit a plea of venue separately, although erroneous, is not alone ground for reversal in the absence of a showing that appellant was injured thereby.[15] Where a district court properly transferred a case to another district court for trial on the merits, any error leading to the transfer was harmless.[16] Error in granting[16.5] or refusing[17] a change of venue is reversible error where substantial harm results or is not negated, where there is clear bias on the part of the trial judge,[18] where the evidence resisting a motion for a change of venue is insufficient,[19] or where there is a refusal on the part of the trial court to hear movant's tendered proof in support of his affidavit for a change of venue.[20] It has also been held that a case will be reversed because of the denial of a change of venue where there is no evidence in the record and the court cannot determine whether or not substantial justice was had at the trial below.[21] Likewise it has been held, where a case was improperly transferred, that the fact that the party against whose objection the transfer was made has had an impartial trial did not cure the error.[22]

§ 1698. Depositions

Harmless error with respect to depositions is not ground for reversal.

It may be stated as a general rule that harmless error with respect to depositions is not a ground for reversal.[22.50] Accordingly, a reversal cannot be had for nonprejudicial error in the taking,[23] admis-

Plea not timely
A defendant, in a libel action, was deprived of no substantial right where the case was fully heard upon the merits by the court in which he appeared without objection, even though he might have pleaded to jurisdiction and have had the case removed to another county if the plea had been timely filed.
Va.—James v. Powell, 152 S.E. 539, 154 Va. 96.

Waiver of jury
Denying a motion for a change of venue for prejudice of inhabitants was not prejudicial error where defendant subsequently waived a jury trial.

No opportunity to file objections

The fact that plaintiff was not afforded an opportunity to file objections to a deposition before offered in evidence, it not having been reduced to writing until that day, was harmless where each objection was ruled on as the questions were read, and no answer to any question, objection to which was sustained, having been read to the jury.

Wyo.—Wyoming Cent. Irr. Co. v. Laporte, 182 P. 485, 26 Wyo. 249.

Effect of introduction of party's deposition

Ruling that party by introducing part of deposition of adverse party made adverse party his witness and was bound by his testimony, although error, did not injuriously affect substantial rights.

(3) So, alleged error in refusing to admit deposition of physician taken by defendant as to plaintiff's competency to sign release was harmless, where deposition was cumulative of another deposition and other testimony, and there was testimony that plaintiff had been taking large doses of nembutal for two months after he was discharged from physician's observation.
Fla.—Putnam Lumber Co. v. Berry, 2 So.2d 133, 146 Fla. 595.

Where deposition was excluded on broadside objection, and much testimony of deponent was admissible, supreme court would determine only whether admissible portions contained testimony of sufficient materiality for exclusion to be prejudicial error, and would not rule on competency and admissibility of each question and answer in deposition.

ceedings where it appears that there has been a full and fair hearing upon the merits and that substantial justice has been done.[38]

On the other hand, however, substantial error in the taking, admission, or exclusion of depositions is ground for reversal.[39]

§ 1699. Discovery

Error in making or denying an order of discovery, which does not result in substantial injury, is not ground for reversal.

A case will not be reversed because of an error committed in discovery proceedings where such error does not result in any substantial injury to the objecting party.[40] Accordingly, the striking of an interrogatory for discovery is harmless error where all the matters sought to be elicited in the interrogatories are otherwise fully testified to and put in evidence.[41] Where, however, the rulings of the judge on interrogatories or applications for discovery result in a substantial denial of a right to the objecting party, the ruling will be reviewed,[42] and the mere circumstance that there has been a trial at which the facts sought by the interrogatories might have been the subject of evidence does not necessarily render harmless the refusal of the trial court to give an order requiring answers.[43]

§ 1700. Security for Costs

Error in allowing or refusing security for costs, which does not prejudice substantial rights, is not ground for reversal.

Error in refusing security for costs, which does not prejudice the rights of the party entitled thereto, is not ground for reversal.[43.50] So, error in re-

Cumulative testimony

(1) The fact that testimony in a deposition of a nonresident disinterested witness was cumulative did not render erroneous admission of a deposition harmless where the witness' testimony tended strongly to support plaintiffs' claim.
N.Y.—Baumeister v. Durham Realty Corporation, 264 N.Y.S. 672, 238 App.Div. 424.

(2) On the other hand, where defendant in trespass to try title insisted in introducing depositions taken in another case to establish the lost deed under which he claimed notwithstanding testimony of six uncontradicted witnesses to that effect, it cannot be held that the erroneous admission of the depositions in evidence was harmless.
Tex.—Martinez v. Bruni, Com.App., 235 S.W. 549.

Insufficient notice

Where the notice merely informed codefendant that plaintiffs intended to take defendant's deposition as a party, error in admitting the deposition as against codefendant required reversal of the judgment for defendant where defendant was enabled by the deposition to cast all blame on codefendant and withdrew from the case himself.
N.Y.—Nixon v. Beacon Transp. Corporation, 264 N.Y.S. 114, 239 App. Div. 830.

Insufficient or evasive answers

Under a statute, providing that when the answers to interrogatories are not full or are evasive, the court may either attach the party and cause full answer to be made in open court, or tax him with costs and continue the cause until full answer is made, or direct a nonsuit or judgment by default or enter an appropriate decree, the failure of the court to compel answers to pertinent interrogatories calling for information material and necessary to plaintiff's case is reversible error.

Sole contradicting testimony

The denial of a motion to strike out or suppress opinions or legal conclusions in a deposition was harmful, where it was the only testimony contradicting that of plaintiffs.

State not liable

Refusal to require persons filing petition in proof of heirship, opposed fusing to require plaintiff to furnish security for costs is rendered harmless where judgment is for plaintiff,[44] particularly where it is affirmed;[45] where, on a final hearing, the costs are rightly taxed to defendant;[46] where plaintiff thereafter gave such security;[47] where, after a verdict for plaintiff, he files a motion and affidavit for leave to prosecute as a poor person, which is granted;[48] or where it appears from the affidavit used on motion to require security for costs that a judgment for some amount should be rendered against defendant.[49] Likewise the sustaining, after judgment, of a motion requiring plaintiff to give security for costs, made before trial, will not authorize a reversal where judgment for costs had already been entered against plaintiff and the action dismissed.[50]

5. Extraordinary or Provisional Remedies

§ 1701. In General

Nonprejudicial error in proceedings related to extraordinary or provisional remedies does not warrant a reversal.

The fact that error is committed in proceedings relating to extraordinary or provisional remedies does not, as a rule, justify a reversal of the final judgment or decree, where the error does not prejudicially affect the substantial rights of the complaining party.[50.50] Accordingly, an erroneous ruling of the court on a writ of sequestration, if not prejudicial to the complaining party, is not ground for a reversal.[51]

§ 1702. Injunctions

A judgment or decree will not be reversed because of harmless error in granting or refusing an injunction.

An error in a proceeding related to an injunction does not justify a reversal of the final judgment or decree where such order does not prejudicially affect the substantial rights of the complaining party.[52] Accordingly, error in granting either a by the state, to file cost bond as nonresidents, was not error which was harmful to state, inasmuch as state is not liable for costs in suit where it is a party, in absence of statute.

Requirement of bond
(1) Failure of court to require party obtaining an injunction to file bond or undertaking to pay damages resulting from the injunction is harmless error where it is finally de-permanent or a temporary injunction,[53] or refusing,[54] dissolving,[55] continuing,[56] or refusing to dissolve[57] an injunction will not justify a reversal where the rights of the complaining party are not prejudicially affected thereby. Granting an injunction against past acts is not harmful error, as no step can be taken thereunder,[58] and enjoining a party from going upon land and cutting timber is harmless, when a writ of possession has been awarded to the other party.[59]

On the other hand, prejudicial error in granting, refusing, or dismissing an injunction is ground for reversal,[60] and a decree awarding an injunction termined that the granting of the injunction was proper.

(4) Plaintiff not entitled to injunction is not prejudiced by order granting injunction on condition that plaintiff should execute a bond.
Ga.—Reeve v. Hicks, 28 S.E.2d 649, 197 Ga. 181.

(5) The requirement that plaintiff file a bond as a condition to permission to ask for an injunction in an amended bill is harmless error, where there is nothing in the record to warrant the reviewing court in holding that it would have been an abuse of discretion if the exclusion of the right to ask for an injunction in the amended bill had been made absolute.
Md.—Kearney v. Beverly Hills Corporation, 145 A. 385, 157 Md. 136.

(6) Failure of plaintiff to post a bond prior to trial in a lease cancellation case in which a restraining order was granted was not ground for reversal of judgment for plaintiff, where answer to question of whether restraining order ripened into temporary injunction which required posting of a bond by plaintiff, because of delay between granting of order and trial, could not affect the only issue litigated.

When an interlocutory injunction is issued without notice in a case against an innocent party has been held in and of itself reversible;[61] and, furthermore, where the law and the facts did not justify an injunction, it has been held that such injunction could not be sustained on appeal on the theory that it was harmless to defendant as long as he did not do the acts the order prohibited.[62]

§ 1703. Attachment and Garnishment

Harmless error in proceedings relative to an attachment or garnishment is not cause for reversal.

A judgment or decree will not be reversed because of harmless error committed in any of the proceedings relating to an attachment,[63] or in the proceedings relating to a garnishment.[64] Accordingly, the making of an order sustaining an attachment will not justify a reversal where no substantial rights of the party complaining are affected thereby.[65] An error in refusing to vacate an attachment is no ground for reversing a judgment on the merits.[66] Where the original affidavit contains a sufficient statement, an order permitting an amendment is without prejudice.[67] Error in sustaining a motion to quash an attachment is not a ground for reversal where no prejudice resulted therefrom.[68] where notice should have been given, appellate court will reverse order on that ground without regard to any other question.

Where, in an action for the price of an automobile sold to a minor, coupled with attachment, when the minor brought action to recover the portion of the price already paid, also attaching the automobile, the seller was not prejudiced by the fact that the car was under attachment in both suits, since ordering judgment on the verdict for defendant in the first suit discharged the attachment therein, and payment of judgment for plaintiff in the second suit would discharge that attachment.

Date of execution
Where the statutes providing for property claimant's affidavit and bond do not require that the date of the execution be stated, the fact that incorrect dates were included in forms used is of no consequence in the absence of a showing of injury by the error.

Number of case
Where the number of the case in which a judgment was rendered was incorrectly given in an application for garnishment under it, but there was no question as to its identity, the mistake was not reversible error.
Tex.—Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. v. Rogers, Civ.App., 170 S.W. 258.

Judgment against principal debtor
Where, in a suit against husband and wife to recover balance, with garnishment against a bank admitting its possession of money claimed by the wife, in which the judgment was against her claim, the case will not be reversed because the record did not show a judgment against the husband as the principal debtor, since it cannot make any difference to the garnishee about the payment of it, so far as the wife's claim is concerned, she having been adjudicated to be without the right to the money.
Ark.—Loyd v. Bennett, 185 S.W. 292, 124 Ark. 403.

Submitting equitable issue to jury
Error in improperly submitting an equitable issue to jury in a garnishment proceedings is harmless, since a finding thereon would be merely advisory, where record shows that court correctly made same finding on the issue and based its judgment thereon.

A sale of attached property in bulk, instead of at retail, is not a reversible error.[69] Where defendant denied the grounds of attachment and pleaded to the merits, and plaintiff takes only a general judgment, errors as to issues raised concerning the attachment are immaterial.[70] Where, however, substantial error is committed in the proceedings for an attachment,[71] or in the proceedings for a garnishment,[72] the case will be reversed for such reason.

§ 1704. Appointment of Receiver

A case will not be reversed for a harmless error in the proceedings for, or appointment of, a receiver.

The fact that error is committed in the appointment of a receiver, or in any of the proceedings relative thereto, is not cause for reversing the case on appeal where the objecting party is not substantially injured thereby.[73] Where a case is a proper one for the appointment of a receiver, an order appointing him will not be reversed, after he has performed his duties, for failure to give notice to the adverse party;[74] nor where the propriety of the court's action in appointing him was considered and argued by both parties before the trial court on motion to discharge the receiver, and where the court sustained the original order by refusing to dis-

Deficiency judgment revived by reversal

Where payment of a judgment for deficiency in foreclosure proceedings, in order to protect debtor's homestead, is ordered as a condition to granting of a motion to discharge the receiver, such a requirement does not necessitate reversal, even though the foreclosure petition contained no allegation as basis of appointment of receiver, since reversal of such order would merely revive deficiency judgment.

charge the receiver.[75] Also, rulings made by the court during the progress of the hearing, which in all probability did not affect its decision in appointing a receiver, will not, even though erroneous, require a reversal of the judgment.[76] On the other hand, error in receivership proceedings which is prejudicial to the objecting party will furnish ground for reversal.[76.5]

6. References

§ 1705. Grant or Refusal

In the absence of any substantial harm a case will not be reversed because of the granting or refusing of a reference.

Mere technical objections, which are without merit, to an order of reference are not grounds for reversal,[77] and where an unnecessary reference was had, if no prejudice results, other than additional costs, the reviewing court will not reverse.[78] Error in submitting the case to a referee, instead of to a jury, is harmless and is not ground for reversal at the instance of plaintiff where plaintiff does not have a cause of action.[79] Likewise, a refusal or failure to refer a case will not work a reversal where appellant is not damaged by the refusal.[80] Where, however, the erroneous submission of the case deprives the complaining party of his right to a trial by jury, the error is prejudicial and ground for reversal.[81] Also, the granting of a compulsory reference, where it is unauthorized, may be ground for reversal.[82]

§ 1706. Other Questions Relating to References

Harmless error in proceedings relating to a reference is not ground for a reversal of the case.

A case will not be reversed because of any errors committed in proceedings relating to a reference, where no substantial harm results therefrom to the objecting party;[83] and so irregularity in the

Charge proper
In an action against a steamship owner for damage to a canal bridge, the admission of portions of the auditor's report objected to, as based on an erroneous finding of law with respect to the applicability of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and presumptions from unexplained facts, is not injurious, where the trial court properly charged upon the matter.

Refusal to recommit
(1) Refusal to recommit case to auditor because of errors committed by the auditor is not ground for reversal where the party objecting was not prejudiced.
Mass.—Ryder v. Town of Lexington, 21 N.E.2d 382, 303 Mass. 281.

(2) So, error, if any, in refusal to recommit case to auditor was held harmless where auditor's finding approved by judge appeared to be correct and reached proper result.
Ga.—Callan Court Co. v. Citizens & appointment of a referee,[84] or failure of a referee to follow a statute,[85] where harmless, is not cause for reversal of the case. Irregularity in the master's report is harmless, where it is merely advisory;[86] and, similarly, error by the referee in interpreting an ordinance,[87] or of an order recommitting a case to him,[88] or error in the conclusions of law by the master,[89] is harmless where it is not binding upon the court. Admission of improper evidence by the master is harmless, where such evidence does not affect the substantial rights of the objecting party.[90] Likewise, where the error is harmless, failure to give proper notice in reference proceedings will not cause a reversal of the case.[91] The premature entry of an order of reference,[92] the setting aside of an order of reference without notice,[93] or error or irregularities in directions[94] or rulings[95] of the referee or in proceedings before the referee[96] or in the report or findings of the referee,[97] or in rulings on the referee's report or findings,[98] will

(3) So too, refusal to recommit case to the auditor for the auditor's failure to rule on the evidence is not ground for reversal, where the auditor's decision is upheld, regardless of such evidence. Also refusal to recommit a case for the auditor's failure to rule on an amendment to the answer is not ground for reversal, where such matter is passed on in the final decree. Likewise, the refusal to recommit a case for the auditor's failure to pass on demurrer is not ground for reversal, where the final decree rules on the demurrer.

N.Y.—Chaffee v. Marsh, 156 N.Y.S.2d 376, 2 A.D.2d 934—Verdow administering the appropriate statutory oath to[6] a jury does not require a reversal of a judgment where no prejudice resulted therefrom to the party complaining. Also the fact that a juror is selected who is incompetent because of relationship to counsel[7] or party,[8] because of his acquaintance with one of the witnesses,[9] because he has failed to pay taxes,[10] or who is for any other reason incompetent,[11] is not ground for reversal, in the absence of prejudice to the complaining party. Likewise, irregularities of the clerk in calling jurors will not be ground for disturbing the judgment unless the complaining party is prejudiced.[12]

On the other hand, substantial prejudice resulting from error in the selection or impaneling of the jury is ground for reversal,[13] and, according to some authority, where a statute enacted for the purpose of securing fair and impartial jurors has been substantially disregarded and the question has been properly raised, the court will not stop to speculate on whether the complaining party was actually prejudiced or not by the method employed, it being sufficient to say that he has been deprived of a statutory right, and this of itself is prejudicial error authorizing a reversal of the judgment.[14]

Excusing jurors. It is not error for the court to excuse a juror of its own motion, over objection, where it is not shown that the jury which was finally impaneled was not an impartial one.[15]

b. Examination of Jurors

Nonprejudicial error in the examination of a juror is not cause for reversal.

A case will not be reversed because error is committed in the examination of the jurors, where the complaining party is not harmed by such error.[16] Consequently, where the error is nonprejudicial, a case will not be reversed because of the allowance of improper questions on the examination of jurors,[17] because of the refusal to permit a juror to answer questions touching his competency,[18] or where the error is immaterial because appellant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges[19] or immaterial because each juror on his voir dire examination stated in response to the questions of the court that he was free from prejudice and would try the case fairly on the evidence and the law.[20]

Erroneous refusal to allow examination of jurors in civil cases under a statute allowing it does not require the reviewing court to grant a new trial, the statute conferring no substantive right, but amounting merely to a detail of procedure.[21] On the other hand, substantial prejudice resulting from error in the examination of jurors is ground for reversal.[21.5]

Reference to insurance or other indemnity. Whether misconduct in referring to insurance of defendant on voir dire examination of the jury is so prejudicial as to require reversal depends on the circumstances of each particular case.[22] The test to be applied is whether plaintiff's counsel was acting in good faith and without intention to secure advantage, by injecting the matter into the case;[23] where he is, there is no reversible error,[24] otherwise, Tex.—Heflin v. Wilson, Civ.App., 297 S.W.2d 864, error granted.

Bystanders filling vacancies

Action of trial court in summoning five persons as bystanders to fill vacancies on jury panel which was seasonably objected to by defendant was error requiring reversal.

there is.[25] So, refusal to permit interrogation of jurors on the subject of their affiliation or connection with a liability insurer is not ground for reversal when not prejudicial;[25.5] otherwise it may constitute reversible error.[25.10] The case will not ordinarily be reversed because of questions touching on the interest of jurors in insurance or the fact of their carrying insurance where the questions could not have prejudiced appellant in any way,[26] as where defendant's liability under the evidence is not a close question[27] and the damages awarded are not excessive,[28] where it did not appear that defendant carried any insurance,[29] where the questions merely gave to the jury cumulative or subsidiary information regarding a fact already established, and of which they had been fully advised,[30]

Wis.—Walker v. Pomush, 288 N.W. 859, 206 Wis. 45.

Interest in insurance company

(1) The refusal to have the jurors examined as to their being officers, stockholders, or employees of an insurance company which had become subrogated to plaintiff's rights was not prejudicial error, in the absence of any proof that any juror so disqualified was placed on the panel.

Ga.—Atlanta Cadillac Co. v. Manley, 116 S.E. 35, 29 Ga.App. 522.

(2) Whether the judgment will be reversed because plaintiff's counsel asked jurors concerning past and present connections with automobile liability and other insurance companies depends also on the good faith of the questions.

N.C.—Johnson v. Hoffler & Boney Transfer Co., 168 S.E. 495, 204 N.C. 420.

Local company

Where a surety company was local, and had a large number of stockholders and employees in and about the place where a personal injury action was tried, it was not reversible error to permit plaintiff's counsel to ask the jurors on their examination whether they were interested in the company, the question probably having been asked in good faith.

Mo.—Burrows v. Likes, 166 S.W. 643, 180 Mo.App. 447.

What constitutes "good faith"

"It is true that this court has held it proper to inquire as was here done of jurors on the voir dire when such inquiry is made 'in good faith.' Lozon v. Leamon Bakery Co., 202 N.W. 296, 186 Wis. 84. This seems to imply that, if counsel had any reason to believe or suspected that any juror had stock in or was insured in the insurance company named, it was proper to make the inquiry here made, but, if no such reason or suspicion existed, the inquiry was improper."

Wis.—Walker v. Pomush, 288 N.W. 859, 861, 206 Wis. 45.

Discretion of trial court

Form of interrogatory used on voir dire examination of prospective jurors to ascertain whether they are interested in any insurance company, the circumstances of its being used, and the manner of its presentation are largely in the trial court's discretion, which will not be disturbed in the absence of a clear showing of abuse.

N.M.—Olguin v. Thygesen, 143 P.2d 585, 47 N.M. 377.

No purpose of influencing jury

If a question asked jurors on the voir dire as to whether any of them were insured with a named company was not brought into case for purpose of influencing jury, such a question would not constitute reversible error.

Mich.—Marth v. Lambert, 287 N.W. 916, 290 Mich. 557.

Slightly suggestive inquiry

Questions as to whether the jurors would be influenced by the fact that either defendant carried liability insurance are not prejudicial to a codefendant objecting thereto where the inquiry was as slightly suggestive as it could be.

Wash.—Todd v. Alexander, 294 P. 545, 160 Wash. 3.

Verdict not affected

Unless it appears that the verdict was affected by consideration of the fact that defendant was protected by insurance, reversal will not be had because the jury was informed that the amount of a verdict against defendant would be paid by an insurance company.

as where the court or counsel had previously made similar inquiry without objection[31] or where evidence that defendant carried insurance was subsequently admitted without objection.[32] Similarly the case will not be reversed when the improper question was withdrawn and the jury cautioned to eradicate any impression made by it;[33] where it is not shown that the question objected to conveyed to the jury the idea that defendant was insured,[34] as where it does not appear that the persons who actually served on the jury heard the questions;[35] or where the appellate court has power to render such judgment as the evidence may warrant.[36]

On the other hand, where prejudice to the other party results from such misconduct, reversal must follow,[37] as where the verdict rendered was larger than it would have otherwise been,[38] or where the case was a close one and the injection of an insurance company into it might easily have been a determining factor in the verdict,[39] or where counsel persisted after adverse rulings of the court.[40]

It has been held that a judgment will not be reversed because the court, in good faith, questioned a prospective juror on the voir dire, as to his interest in insurance or indemnity companies who might be interested in the verdict;[41] but it is prejudicial error for the court unduly to stress, in a closely contested case, its insurance feature in the voir dire examination of a prospective juror.[42]

False or misleading information by juror. Where false or misleading information of such character as to indicate probable bias is given by a juror on voir dire a reversal may result,[42.5] but if informa-

Error not cured by instructions
In a suit for injuries caused by defendant's automobile, misconduct of plaintiff's counsel in offering, on the voir dire examination of prospective jurors, and in their presence, to prove that defendant carried an indemnity insurance, and that his attorneys were paid by insurer, was not cured by instructions, that defendant was not liable unless at the time of the accident the car was used in his business.

§ 1708. Challenges

a. In general
b. Peremptory challenges

a. In General

Error in a ruling on a challenge for cause is not ground for reversal where prejudice is not shown.

Error in refusing to sustain a challenge for cause is not a ground for reversal where it is clear that no prejudice resulted,[42.50] and, ordinarily, error in this respect is not prejudicial where the peremptory challenges were not exhausted;[43] where the objectionable juror was removed by peremptory challenge;[44] where a nonsuit was properly granted;[44.5] where the verdict was directed;[45] where the verdict showed that no prejudice resulted;[46] where, for other reasons, the juror did not sit in the case;[47] or where an impartial jury was obtained.[48]

While there are decisions which hold that error in refusing to sustain a challenge for cause will require a reversal where all the peremptory challenges were exhausted,[49] it is generally held that the

Relations with counsel

(1) Where juror, on voir dire examination, denied that he had ever been represented by plaintiff's counsel in a legal proceeding although he had been so represented, and defendants' counsel was thereby deprived of right to exercise a peremptory challenge to juror, misconduct of juror required a reversal.
Ky.—Eads v. Stockdale, 220 S.W.2d 971, 310 Ky. 446.

(2) So, where attorney for certain prevailing parties had represented a juror's son in action against the son which was dismissed, and was plaintiff's attorney in an action by the son in which juror was appointed guardian ad litem, and juror failed to disclose such facts on voir dire, although he stated that he knew attorney as an attorney, judgment was required to be reversed for new trial in interest of substantial justice, even though the attorney was free from fault and did not know, and had not met the juror prior to trial.

erroneous overruling of a challenge for cause even though the peremptory challenges are thereafter exhausted, will not warrant a reversal of the judgment unless it is further shown on appeal that an objectionable juror was forced upon the challenging party and sat on the jury after such party had exhausted his peremptory challenges.[50] It has further been held that notwithstanding the exhaustion of peremptory challenges the overruling of a challenge to a juror will not constitute ground for reversal where by statute a three-fourths verdict could have been rendered and the verdict was unanimous.[51]

On the other hand, where the circumstances indicate that the error in overruling the challenge for cause was prejudicial to the complaining party, the judgment should be reversed.[52]

Overruling a challenge to the array or panel will not be held reversible error where no positive injury resulted in consequence thereof.[53]

Rejection of juror. It has been frequently held that the erroneous rejection of a juror challenged for cause is harmless error where no substantial injury results from his rejection,[54] especially where his competency is doubtful,[55] or where it was done by consent of the parties.[56] According to some authority, however, the rejection of a competent juror may be deemed ground of error, although the jurors who actually try the case are competent.[57]

Relationship to witness
In an action against a railroad company for their former employee's insulting language to plaintiff, where such employee was not financially or directly interested in the case, the excusing of five jurors related to him within what would be the prohibited degree were he a party was error requiring new trial, where verdict was not demanded by evidence.

b. Peremptory Challenges

Harmless error in a ruling on a peremptory challenge is not ground for reversal of the case, but denial of a right of peremptory challenge may be regarded as prejudicial per se.

A case will not be reversed because error is committed by the court in a ruling on a peremptory challenge where no harm results to the objecting party from such ruling.[58] Accordingly the fact that a party is allowed more[59] or less[60] than the legal number of peremptory challenges, or that a peremptory challenge is improperly overruled,[61] is not cause for reversal of the case in the absence of prejudice to the complaining party. Sustaining a challenge after both parties had expressed themselves satisfied with the juror on its subsequently being learned, before the completion of the jury, that, although the juror had been discharged by, he expected to go back to work for, defendant is not reversible error,[62] nor will a case be reversed because one of the parties is allowed to exercise a permptory challenge after once having passed the jury.[63]

On the other hand, however, if the complaining party is prejudiced by an erroneous ruling on peremptory challenges, the error is not harmless. Accordingly, a prejudicial error in depriving a party of his legal number of peremptory challenges,[64] or allowing to one of the parties additional peremptory challenges,[65] is ground for reversal. Moreover, it has been held that the denial of a right of peremptory challenge is prejudicial per se and harmful, and a party is not required to make an affirmative showing that the denial actually influenced the result, but whether it had the capacity for doing so.[65.10]

8. Conduct of Trial or Hearing in General

§ 1709. General Statement

Unless it is prejudicial to the rights of the parties, a judgment will not be reversed for error in the conduct of the trial or hearing and this rule has been applied to a wide variety of matters.

A judgment will not be reversed for errors oc-

Jury trial of equity case or equitable issues
(1) If the court finally disposes of the case as if it is in equity, the use of a jury therein is not ground for reversal.
U.S.—Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco v. Idaho Grimm Alfalfa Seed Growers' Ass'n, C.C.A.Idaho, 8 F.2d 922, certiorari denied 46 S. Ct. 347, 270 U.S. 646, 70 L.Ed. 778.
S.C.—Anderson v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 178 S.E. 819, 175 S.C. 254.

(2) "Where an equity case is tried to a jury without objection by any party thereto, and the verdict returned by the jury is adopted and approved by the trial judge as his own findings of fact and conclusions of law, and judgment is rendered by the court thereon, and said findings, conclusions, and judgments are such as the court, sitting without a jury, should and would have found, made and rendered in the case and are correct in the light of the entire record, no error may be predicated thereon."
Okl.—Lee v. Terrell, 40 P.2d 10, 14, 15, 170 Okl. 310.

(3) Fact that an equitable issue has been submitted to, and decided by, a jury will not cause a reversal where the court has reached at law the conclusion which should have been reached in equity.
U.S.—Atlantic Greyhound Lines of West Virginia v. Metz, C.C.A.Va., 70 F.2d 166, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 73, 293 U.S. 562, 79 L.Ed. 662.

Ordering issue out of chancery by chancellor, without knowledge of evidential facts, was error, but harmless, where jury's verdict on issue was set aside.
Va.—Fitchette v. Cape Charles Bank, 133 S.E. 492, 146 Va. 715.

Preliminary ruling that certain issues were triable by a jury was harmless, where no issue was in fact submitted to the jury.
S.C.—National City Bank v. Huey & Martin Drug Co., 102 S.E. 516, 113 S.C. 333.

Advisory jury
(1) Erroneous use by trial court of advisory jury in trial of action which was triable of right by jury and in which both parties had waived right to jury and requested trial without jury was not prejudicial, in view of fact that trial judge made his own independent findings of fact and conclusions of law.
Ky.—Brock v. Farmer, 291 S.W.2d 531.

(2) Where parties agreed to try case without jury, plaintiff was not prejudiced by granting of defendants' motion to try case to jury made on morning of trial, where continuance was not asked and jury was merely advisory.
Ky.—Smith v. Brown, 251 S.W.2d 881.

(3) Defendant in suit for declaratory judgment could not complain of use of jury where court treated jury as merely advisory, and findings and judgment did not depend on verdict.

Refusal of separate trial

In a suit to cancel a lease, refusing the sublessee a separate trial because he was not connected with the alleged fraud of the lessees was not prejudicial where the court made no finding on the issue of fraud.

Defendant ill

In personal injury action fact that defendant who had come to court while not feeling well, became ill and was taken out of courtroom, was not, of itself, and in absence of some special circumstance or reason, prejudicial to plaintiff.

the courtroom of his attorney or counsel;[74.5] refusing request for separation and sequestration of witnesses;[74.10] or the exclusion [74.15] or failure to exclude[74.20] witnesses from the courtroom.

Likewise, where appellant has not been prejudiced, the court will not reverse the judgment because of the misconduct of a party,[75] interpreter,[76] a spectator or the audience;[77] confusion resulting from the inability of an interpreter to speak English well;[78] the presence, in the capacity of bailiff, of a person who was on the jury on a former trial of the case;[79] refusal of a party, while on the witness stand, to answer questions put to him;[80] punishing a witness for contempt for refusing to answer per-

Exclusion by court

In an action against a taxicab driver and its owner for injuries to a passenger, requiring the latter, for indecorous conduct, to leave the court room during the examination of witnesses of the accident by defendants' attorney was not prejudicial to defendants, where such owner was not present when the accident occurred and later testified as to statements made by the injured plaintiff after the accident which were inconsistent with her testimony as to how it happened, and the judge, trying the case without a jury, weighed the testimony carefully and declared that, but for the other witnesses' testimony, he would be disposed to order judgment against plaintiffs.

Cal.—Pedrow v. Federoff, 247 P. 212, 77 C.A. 164.

Imprisoned defendant

In an action for death due to shooting by defendant, overruling of defendant's motion that an order be entered for the production of defendant in the trial court, defendant being confined in the state penitentiary at the time, was held not reversible error, where there had been no attempt to procure the deposition of defendant.

Permitting alleged owner to remain

In suit to try title to realty wherein the rule was invoked as to witnesses, action of trial court in permitting a witness who was alleged to be owner of land at time of trial to remain in courtroom and participate in the trial and testify, over objection of defendant, was not an abuse of discretion, so as to require reversal, especially in absence of a statement of facts in the reviewing court.

Holding child in lap

The act of a widow, suing under the federal Employers' Liability Act for the death of her husband, in holding in her lap, while testifying, her infant child is not ground for reversal, unless an excessive verdict was induced thereby.

U.S.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stewart's Adm'x, 174 S.W. 744, 163 Ky. 823, affirmed Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stewart, 36 S.Ct. 586, 241 U.S. 261, 60 L.Ed. 989.

Use of the word "robbed" by plaintiff, relative to defendant's conduct, is not ground for complaint where jury did not appear to have been influenced thereby.

Or.—Rogers v. Blumauer, 255 P. 324, 122 Or. 352.

Weeping of party or witness

(1) Mere fact that a party weeps in the presence of the jury does not justify reversal of a judgment or verdict in his favor.

(2) In an action for death, where counsel placed the widow of deceased, who was a party to action, on the stand, fact that she wept in view of the jury was not prejudicial misconduct, where court instructed jury not to be influenced by sympathy in their verdict.

Cal.—Asbury v. Goldberg, 47 P.2d 311, 8 C.A.2d 70.

(3) So, in an action for her son's death, improper examination of the mother concerning his injuries and her exhibition of emotion were held not to warrant reversal, where the verdict of the jury was for a sum less than the statutory amount.

Kan.—Peters v. Cavanah, 295 P. 693, 132 Kan. 244.

Going under assumed name

Failure of a witness at the trial of an automobile accident case to be summoned by, or to give, her correct name, was held no ground for reversal, when it did not appear that plaintiff would be prejudiced and plaintiff did not allege that the witness was unworthy of belief or that he was surprised by her testimony.

La.—Thomas v. Thomas, App., 155 So. 67.

Destruction of evidence

In an action for injuries, defendant's alleged destruction of X-ray pictures was held not prejudicial where plaintiff used other X-ray pictures, which were taken before and after the time when the lost pictures were taken, and the doctor who took the lost plates was permitted to testify as to what they showed.

(2) The fact that a witness, examined as to his conviction of a crime, gives details, not called for by the question is not reversible error.
Miss.—Bufkin v. Grisham, 128 So. 563, 157 Miss. 746.

(3) In an action for breach of contract for personal services, the refusal by the court to order a mistrial because of plaintiff's witness' voluntary statement on cross-examination by defendant that an answer was filed by defendant in the hope of obtaining a settlement was not prejudicial error, where the court struck out the voluntary statement, and neither plaintiff nor his counsel were instrumental in causing it, and defendant's question to which the statement was a response was not specific.
Mo.—Scharff v. Standard Tank Car Co., 264 S.W. 56, 214 Mo.App. 658.

(4) Where a witness has been examined, cross-examined, and excused from the stand, and thereafter is recalled for further cross-examination in reply to a question relating to a summary of his former testimony as to what he desired the court and jury to understand, and the witness gave an answer in part incompetent, irrelevant, and prejudicial, which the court on motion promptly withdrew from the consideration of the jury, and cautioned them to disregard, and expressly reprimanded the witness in the presence of the jury, and later, in its general charge, admonished the jury to exclude such answer, it was not erroneous to overrule a motion of the cross-examiner for a mistrial, withdrawing a juror and continuing the case.

Inspection of similar objects

(1) Alleged error in permitting jury to be taken out to observe an automobile similar to one involved, to ascertain where the hinges were on door, was not prejudicial, notwithstanding it would have been better to have required testimony as to location of hinges.
Ohio.—Martin v. Hooffstetter, App., 42 N.E.2d 556.

(2) On the other hand, in an action, under the federal Employers' Liability Act, for an injury to the hand of an employee, sustained in attempting to remove ashes and cinders from a locomotive with a defective shaker bar, the denial of defendant's request for a jury inspection of a similar engine was not prejudicial.

(3) In action against city for injuries caused by defective sidewalk, action of trial court in viewing premises after jury had returned verdict for plaintiff and prior to ruling on defendant's motion and supplemental motion for new trial was harmless.
Okl.—City of Norman v. Lewis, 69 P.2d 377, 180 Okl. 344.

85. Reduction of claim

Where defendant, counterclaiming for damages in an automobile collision, in a discussion in the jury's absence of the propriety of a cross-question, admitted that he had received indemnity insurance for two hundred fifty dollars of his total alleged loss of three hundred fifty dollars caused by plaintiff's negligence, such forced admission is not reversible error where he then asked only one hundred dollars.

Prejudicial errors. Where the error in procedure is such that the judgment was not obtained by due process of law,[92] as where a party is deprived of a jury trial[93] or of the right of trial by the court of equitable issues when properly demanded,[94] it is not harmless. So the case will be reversed for prejudicial error in the conduct of the trial or hearing,[95] as where a party is deprived of the right to

Denial of opening statement

Refusal by court to permit plaintiff's counsel to make an opening statement to jury other than the reading of declaration was not reversible error where declaration set out in detail alleged facts on which plaintiff relied for recovery and thus portrayed the theory of plaintiff's case.
Fla.—Juhasz v. Barton, 1 So.2d 476, 146 Fla. 484.

Verdict demanded by evidence

While the right to open and conclude the argument is generally an important and valuable right, yet, where the verdict as rendered was demanded by the evidence, error in permitting a party to open and conclude the argument was not reversible error.

Deprivation of essence of fundamental right

Where error or irregularity complained of patently fails to take into account the substance of a fundamental right of a party and deprives the party of the essence of such right, in a way that is plainly ineradicable either by an instruction or other action of the court subsequent to the motion for the mistrial, a mistrial must be granted as a matter of right, and a denial of mistrial in such situation is a mistaken exercise of judicial discretion and hence harmful error, since such action would clearly and unequivocally be a manifest denial of justice under the law.

Having issues of liability and damages tried separately or before different juries may result in prejudice to defendant.
N.C.—Parker v. Belotta, 200 S.E. 887, 215 N.C. 87.

Granting judgment on merits on preliminary hearing

Error in granting declaratory judgment on merits on hearing for temporary injunction could not be considered to be harmless although petitioners did not establish that they were not ready at time of injunction hearing for hearing on merits and record did not disclose that new trial might result in different judgment.
Tex.—Houston Belt & Terminal Ry. Co. v. Texas & N. O. R. Co., 289 S.W.2d 217.

Refusal to enter appearance by new counsel

Where trial judge permitted plaintiff's original counsel to withdraw and denied request of new counsel to enter their appearances because not ready to try cause on a peremptory setting, refusal was fundamental error and was not harmless because the dismissal was without prejudice to the institution of another action.

Reference to insurance or indemnity. It is ordinarily reversible error to adduce evidence on the trial or hearing of an action which informs the jury

Denial of right to comment

In action for injuries, denial to defendant's counsel of right to comment on plaintiff's failure to call one of his doctors who was not equally available to defendant as to plaintiff, notwithstanding plaintiff's waiver of his privilege as to such doctor, was prejudicial error, which was not rendered harmless by fact that evidence was sufficient to support verdict for plaintiff.

Colo.—Creighton v. Campbell, 149 P. 448, 27 Colo.App. 120.

Exhibiting plaintiff's child

(1) It is reversible error to exhibit to the jury a crippled child of plaintiff, suing for a personal injury negligently inflicted by defendant, whereby excessive damages are awarded.

N.Y.—Bardelli v. Pittsburg Contracting Co., 148 N.Y.S. 389, 163 App. Div. 45.

(2) In action for injuries, plaintiff's permitting her two children of tender years to re-enter courtroom and again exhibit themselves before jury after opposing counsel and trial judge had requested that they be excluded from courtroom held to require new trial.

Ariz.—Western Truck Lines v. Berry, 87 P.2d 484, 53 Ariz. 216.

Judge acting as attorney

For a judge during his term of office to be allowed to appear as attorney or counsel in the cause of another is error prejudicial to the other party.

Vt.—Cady v. Lang, 115 A. 140, 95 Vt. 287.

Judge sitting alone in banc

Where the three regular judges of the court believed themselves disqualified and a judge from another county was called in to try the case, the action of the invited judge in sitting alone for the purpose of hearing exceptions to his own adjudication was error, requiring reversal, since a judge from another county should have been called in to sit with him in banc.

Error not cured

Error in denying plaintiff the right to open and close in an action on notes was held not cured by defendant's dismissal of his affirmative defense and a general instruction to disregard the evidence introduced thereunder.

that the loss will fall on an insurance company;[2] but each case must be determined on its own facts,[2.5] and the mere mention of liability insurance in the examination of witnesses or presentation of evidence does not always constitute reversible error.[2.10]

The error is harmless where the jury presumably understood that insurers were interested in the case or were otherwise properly informed thereof, or the reference was merely incidental;[3] and the case will not be reversed in the absence of a showing

Lack of insurance

Admission of testimony of one of two defendants in negligence action that witness was not protected by insurance is not prejudicial error, if his lack of insurance is not featured or made basis for appeal to increase or decrease damages recovered by plaintiff.

Wis.—Sheehan v. Lewis, 260 N.W. 633, 218 Wis. 588.
"This question of a reference to the fact of a defendant carrying insurance has been before the courts on many occasions; sufficient, it would be surmised, to have established a definite rule. Yet no hard and fast rule has been announced. A fair conclusion, from a résumé of the cases, would be to class such a reference under the head of misconduct of counsel. It might be conceded that where it is obvious or fairly deducible that the sole purpose was to impress that fact of insurance on the minds of the jury, for no other reason than to create a prejudice, then a reversal will follow. But where the reference, as indicated in the cited cases, is merely incidental, misconduct will not be found. And it would seem a fair corollary of the rule that where the point is debatable and offers an open field for legitimate argument, a reviewing court should not arbitrarily undo the results of a trial had under the supervision of the trial judge, whose opportunity of approximating the situation was in the first instance, and who had refused a new trial."
Cal.—Noble v. Bacon, 18 P.2d 699, 702, 129 C.A. 177.

Questioning insurance agent

In an action for damages in an automobile collision, questioning a witness relative to being engaged in the insurance business, and whether he had insurance business with defendant, while not relevant, was held not so prejudicial as to warrant granting a new trial because of being intended to impress on the jury the fact that defendant carried insurance on his car.
Ky.—Fenley Model Dairy v. Secuskie, 290 S.W. 1044, 218 Ky. 59.

Evidence of settlement

"The admission of evidence tending to show that defendant had received a settlement from an insurance company presumably for injuries received in an accident was not so prejudicial as to require a new trial in a suit against him to recover for medical services rendered in the treatment of such injuries."
Minn.—Sahr v. Juul, 232 N.W. 717, 181 Minn. 415.

Mention of plaintiff's insurance was not prejudicial where nothing was said or developed in presence of jury that defendant had insurance.

Wis.—Smith v. Yellow Cab Co., 180 N.W. 125, 173 Wis. 33.

Where proof supported amount of judgment after remittitur and evidence justified verdict holding defendant liable, plaintiff's reference to insurance, although it may have affected allowance of damages, was not reversible error.

Effect on liability

Although verdict for plaintiff was conservative, court was required on defendants' appeal to consider whether repeated reference to insurance influenced jury not only in determining amount of verdict but also in deciding issue of contributory negligence in plaintiff's favor.

that the loss will fall on an insurance company;[2] but each case must be determined on its own facts,[2.5] and the mere mention of liability insurance in the examination of witnesses or presentation of evidence does not always constitute reversible error.[2.10]

The error is harmless where the jury presumably understood that insurers were interested in the case or were otherwise properly informed thereof, or the reference was merely incidental;[3] and the case will not be reversed in the absence of a showing

Admission of testimony of one of two defendants in negligence action that witness was not protected by insurance is not prejudicial error, if his lack of insurance is not featured or made basis for appeal to increase or decrease damages recovered by plaintiff.

Wis.—Sheehan v. Lewis, 260 N.W. 633, 218 Wis. 588.
"This question of a reference to the fact of a defendant carrying insurance has been before the courts on many occasions; sufficient, it would be surmised, to have established a definite rule. Yet no hard and fast rule has been announced. A fair conclusion, from a résumé of the cases, would be to class such a reference under the head of misconduct of counsel. It might be conceded that where it is obvious or fairly deducible that the sole purpose was to impress that fact of insurance on the minds of the jury, for no other reason than to create a prejudice, then a reversal will follow. But where the reference, as indicated in the cited cases, is merely incidental, misconduct will not be found. And it would seem a fair corollary of the rule that where the point is debatable and offers an open field for legitimate argument, a reviewing court should not arbitrarily undo the results of a trial had under the supervision of the trial judge, whose opportunity of approximating the situation was in the first instance, and who had refused a new trial."
Cal.—Noble v. Bacon, 18 P.2d 699, 702, 129 C.A. 177.

Questioning insurance agent

In an action for damages in an automobile collision, questioning a witness relative to being engaged in the insurance business, and whether he had insurance business with defendant, while not relevant, was held not so prejudicial as to warrant granting a new trial because of being intended to impress on the jury the fact that defendant carried insurance on his car.
Ky.—Fenley Model Dairy v. Secuskie, 290 S.W. 1044, 218 Ky. 59.

Evidence of settlement

"The admission of evidence tending to show that defendant had received a settlement from an insurance company presumably for injuries received in an accident was not so prejudicial as to require a new trial in a suit against him to recover for medical services rendered in the treatment of such injuries."

Effect on liability

ferent verdict would not otherwise have resulted,[7] where the testimony was given in good faith,[8] where the matter was unexpectedly brought out by a witness, not plaintiff, in response to a question asked in good faith by plaintiff's counsel,[9] or where the trial was before the court without a jury[9.5] and the offensive testimony was stricken.[10] So, it has been held that defendant cannot complain of a question relating to his insurance when an objection to the question was sustained,[11] or a nonprejudicial negative answer was given.[11.5]

Permitting[11.10] or refusing to permit[12] disclosure of the interest of an insurance company in plaintiff's case is not necessarily prejudicial error. However, reference to plaintiff's insurance may be ground for reversal when prejudice results.[12.5] Harmless or prejudicial error in referring to insurance on the voir dire examination of the jury is discussed supra § 1707, and such errors in argument of counsel infra § 1713 c.

§ 1710. Time or Term of Trial

Tex.—Moore v. Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co., Civ.App., 238 S.W.2d 741, error dismissed.

Plaintiff's testimony that he had reported collision to his insurance agent was not prejudicial to defendants as suggesting to jury that defendants were protected by insurance.
Tex.—H. J. Heinz Co. v. Ashley, Civ. App., 291 S.W.2d 427.

Insurance on both sides
Fact that defendant brought out fact that insurer was interested in plaintiff's side of automobile accident case held not prejudicial, where jurors also were informed that one likewise was interested in defendant's claim of no liability.

12. S.D.—Stratton v. Sioux Falls Traction System, 226 N.W. 644, 55 S.D. 464.

Plaintiff could not be prejudicially affected by a ruling which prevented a disclosure of fact that an insurance company was interested in a recovery in action.
Kan.—Mehl v. Carter, 237 P.2d 240, 171 Kan. 597.

Workmen's compensation insurer
In an administrator's action for, and on behalf of, a casualty insurance company and the father of deceased for decedent's death, sustaining a motion of plaintiff to forbid defendant making reference to an interest of the insurance company in the action because it paid workmen's compensation after recovery of a prior judgment under the Workmen's Compensation Act was held erroneous, but not prejudicial, since the father's recovery depended on a verdict for more than the amount due the insurer, and keeping the insurer in the background was as likely to be favorable to defendant as to be prejudicial.
S.D.—Stratton v. Sioux Falls Traction System, 226 N.W. 644, 55 S. D. 464.

Objection sustained
Where objection to cross-examination question whether plaintiff's automobile insurance had been canceled as result of accident was sustained, rule that reference to insurance is prejudicial was inapplicable.

Ky.—Northern Kentucky Transp. Co. v. City of Bellevue, 285 S.W.

not properly notified of the time set for trial,[14.5] or that the court held a night session[15] will not operate to reverse where no prejudice results, as where the party complaining on his own showing was not entitled to the relief sought,[16] or where the issues submitted were found in his favor.[17] So it has been held that the trial of an equitable action at the trial term instead of at the special term does not prejudice the rights of either party where the jury are mutually waived and the cause tried by a judge so that the mode of trial is identical with that at special term.[18]

§ 1711. Transfer of Cause

Error in the transfer of a cause is not ground for reversal where the result is not affected.

Erroneously transferring or refusing to transfer a case to or from the law or equity docket is harmless and not ground for reversal where the result must have been the same;[19] but where plaintiff had a right to have his case submitted to the jury and there were no grounds for the assertion of any right by defendant in a court of equity, a transfer to such court is prejudicial error.[20]

Trial before prior case on docket
Ga.—Jones Mercantile Co. v. Copeland, 188 S.E. 586, 54 Ga.App. 647.

Forcing plaintiffs to trial two minutes after answer had been filed afforded no basis for error on ground of surprise to plaintiffs in absence of showing as to how answer constituted surprise to plaintiffs.
Tex.—Roberts v. Jolly, Civ.App., 282 S.W.2d 436.

Prejudicial error
Compelling parties, over their objection, to proceed to trial less than the statutory ten days after the reply was filed and the issues made up is prejudicial error.

Utah.—Xenakis v. Garrett Freight Lines, Inc., 265 P.2d 1007, 1 Utah 2d 299.

No error shown
No harm from the holding of a night session of the court, when plaintiff's leading counsel was unable to be present from illness, appeared, where the bill of exceptions failed to show what transpired at the night session, but did show that plaintiff was represented by two other attorneys.
Tex.—Kirkland v. Rutherford, Civ. App., 171 S.W. 1031.

Fact that case was called for trial late in afternoon and that plaintiff was required to proceed, was not prejudicial to plaintiff, where there was still time before usual hour of adjournment for counsel to open to jury and to complete direct examination of plaintiff.

Compelling trial without counsel
Where plaintiff's own testimony conclusively established that he was not entitled to the relief sought, the fact that trial court compelled plaintiff to go to trial without counsel after having previously granted him one continuance, after which counsel employed by plaintiff withdrew their appearance, was not prejudicial to plaintiff.

Reversing parties on transfer
Where defendant procured a transfer of a law case to the equity side of the court, the court's action in requiring defendants to become complainants on the equity side was not prejudicial to defendants, where the burden of allegation and proof was the same as it would have been under a plea or answer to plaintiff's complaint made in conformity with chancery practice.

evidence was contrary to the verdict;[31] remarks made while ruling on questions of evidence expressing the opinion of the court on the law applicable to the case;[32] remarks indicating court considered excluded evidence;[32.5] a remark characterizing an objection as technical;[33] remarks, made in the jury's presence, in a discussion with counsel as to the law applicable to the case, which announce a correct rule of law;[34] statements not addressed to the jury expressly declared to be dependent on the existence of certain assumed facts and, on that assumption, correctly stating the law;[35] an incorrect statement of law addressed to counsel cured by a subsequent correct statement or ruling;[36] an admonition to the jury with reference to the argument of counsel;[37] comments reflecting on the business capacity of one of the parties as shown by the evidence, general in character and not in any way limiting the action of the jury;[38] and comments reflecting on the character of one of the parties where the remarks were sustained by the evidence.[39]

The rule has also been applied under the following circumstances: Where the verdict, findings, or judgment showed that no prejudice resulted;[40]

Case tried without jury

Trial court's making uncalled-for, disparaging comments about quality of party's evidence was not prejudicial where case was tried without jury.
N.J.—Handelman v. Handelman, 109 A.2d 797, 17 N.J. 1.

Calling witness liar

(1) Where the depositions of a witness for both parties were palpably conflicting, it was not prejudicial error for the court to remark that the witness "must be an awful liar."
Kan.—Connor v. Wilkie, 41 P. 71, 1 Kan.App. 492.

(2) Remarks of trial court, before whom case was tried without a jury, including statement that defendant was a liar, did not constitute prejudicial misconduct where at time remarks were made the witness had been thoroughly impeached by a disinterested witness.
Cal.—Jaffe v. Vitz, 191 P.2d 802, 84 C.A.2d 810.

Interpreting testimony

Statements, made in response to a motion to strike testimony, merely giving the court's understanding of the witness' testimony, were held not prejudicial error under the circumstances of the case.

standing the inaccuracy of an expression used, the intended meaning of the court was plain;[50] where the remarks were calculated and intended simply to offset an irrelevant suggestion that had been made in the presence of the jury by counsel of the adverse party;[51] and where amendments were permitted to obviate criticisms directed against pleadings.[52]

So, with respect to misconduct of the trial judge, it has been held that, in the absence of a showing of harm or prejudice to the complaining party, no ground for reversal results from the following circumstances: Absence of the judge from the courtroom during the trial[52.5] or the deliberations of the jury,[53] or the fact that he slept for a few minutes while testimony was being taken;[54] that he interrupted counsel during the argument,[55] or that he displayed irritation;[56] that he examined or

Sarcastic comments

Cal.—Bate v. Jolin, 274 P. 971, 206 C. 504.

Rebuking witness

(1) The court's remarks to a witness that the witness had avoided several easy questions, and that the court would like to have the witness answer the question before him, were held not reversible error, in view of subsequent instructions cautioning the jury to disregard remarks of the court thought to be comments on the facts.

cross-examined a witness,[57] and made objections and ruled thereon in behalf of an absent party financially unable to employ counsel;[58] that he failed to refresh the memory of counsel charged with misquoting a witness and to advise the jury of the exact words used;[59] that he instructed the jury to disregard certain statements of counsel pertaining to matters not in issue;[60] that he ordered the case resubmitted for consideration without the knowledge, stipulation, or consent of counsel;[61] that he jailed plaintiff's witness for intoxication before his cross-examination, where defendant thereafter made no effort to have him recalled for cross-examination;[62] that he viewed premises in absence of parties and counsel;[62.5] or that he impartially advised both parties to settle the case,[63] or agree on a particular matter arising in the case.[63.5] So it has been held that remarks by the judge, in a trial without a jury, denominating the transaction between the parties as a plain steal by defendant and likening plaintiff to the man that fell among thieves are not ground for reversal.[64]

(2) The fact that the court told defendant to conduct himself like a gentleman, when defendant stated that plaintiff was "a straight out liar" when she gave certain testimony, was held not inflammatory nor prejudicial, but only a lenient discharge of an imperative duty invoked by defendant's remark.
Tex.—Daniels v. Starnes, Civ.App., 61 S.W.2d 548.

(3) The fact that the court in the presence of the jury asked a witness, who had given false testimony with regard to his qualifications as a physician, if he understood an oath, telling him that he was old enough to know better, and that it would be his duty to call the attention of the grand jury to the testimony, is not ground for reversal.
Cal.—Bossert v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 P. 597, 172 C. 504.

Answering for witness

Where defendant's counsel persisted in asserting his right to a "yes or no" answer by plaintiff to the question whether defendant in his testimony "got anything right that plaintiff said to him," after the court had ruled the question out, the court's direction to plaintiff, to say "yes and that will settle it," was held not reversible error on the ground that the court answered for the witness, the remark being more in the nature of a rebuke for the counsel's contumacy.

Implication of usury

The court's questions to defendant, who demanded more than was due for an automobile, as to whether he knew of the usury law, was held not reversible error, the jury being entitled to draw their own inferences from the facts before them.
Conn.—Kuzemka v. Gregory, 146 A. 17, 109 Conn. 117.

Interruption of examination

In the cross-examination of plaintiff's witness an interruption of the cross-examination by the court asking if the witness understood a question relative to the purpose of the witness and deceased going to the building they were directed to repair, and a further remark that the court "purposed to see that the witness understands questions," were not error.
Mo.—Stratton v. Nafziger Baking Co., App., 237 S.W. 538.

Failure to question witnesses

Notwithstanding the right of the trial court to elicit testimony by questioning a witness, failure of the court to do so, in order to bring out more evidence on a particular point, is not prejudicial error, where there is already some evidence in the case on which the jury may determine the particular point. Thus in an action against a partnership for conversion of cattle, failure of the trial court to question witnesses so as to show that the partnership was engaged in buying and selling cattle was held not reversible error.

b. Prejudicial Error

The judgment will be reversed for remarks or misconduct preventing a fair trial.

Where the conduct or remarks of the judge do not permit a fair trial for the complaining party, the judgment must be reversed.[65] This principle has

Court may not minimize

When complaint is made that conduct of trial judge was prejudicial to litigant, reviewing court may not ignore or minimize assignments of misconduct made with conviction and in good faith, notwithstanding its lack of disposition to be critical of conduct of trial judge.

Cal.—Hays v. Viscome, 264 P.2d 173, 122 C.A.2d 135, 39 A.L.R.2d 1435.

Cumulative effect prejudicial

Although numerous comments or remarks by trial judge taken separately did not justify reversal of judgment on grounds of judicial misconduct, the record showed that their cumulative effect did prejudice plaintiff's case.

Cal.—Delzell v. Day, 223 P.2d 625, 36 C.2d 349.

Comment on evidence violating constitution

Comment by trial judge on the evidence violates constitutional provision that judges shall not charge with respect to matters of fact or comment thereon, and such comment constitutes reversible error.

Ariz.—Glowacki v. A. J. Bayless Markets, Inc., 263 P.2d 799, 76 Ariz. 295.

Reference to insurance

It is reversible error for trial court needlessly to bring to jury's attention fact that insurance company or other indemnitor is defending action.

Vt.—McCutcheon v. Leonard, 39 A.2d 848, 114 Vt. 38.

been applied to remarks which exhibit a bias against a party,[66] show a manifestly hostile attitude to an attorney who was proceeding entirely within his rights and in accordance with his duty to his client,[67] tend to discredit a witness[68] or evidence offered,[69] or take away from the jury a question which is properly for their consideration;[70] misstate the evidence with respect to an important question of fact;[70.5] and to misconduct of the judge in calling the clerk to preside at the argument and temporarily leaving the courtroom,[71] taking part in the cross-examination to such an extent as to prejudice the jury,[72] saying "Objection sustained" when no objection had been interposed,[73] and refusing to permit counsel to read the pleadings to the jury.[74] Even though the jury were instructed to disregard the erroneous remarks, the case must be reversed if the instruction was insufficient to overcome the impression which the jury must have received from the statement.[75]

Requiring apology

In trespass to try title for land sold by defendant under a trust deed after a note secured thereby had been paid and the lien extinguished, the court's requirement of an apology from defendant for shaking his finger in the face of the attorney for plaintiff, while repeatedly denying a fact upon which he was being questioned, after an assertion by plaintiff's attorney that he was a "damned liar," is reversible error.

a. In General

(1) Harmless error
(2) Prejudicial error

(1) Harmless Error

(a) In general
(b) Absence of effect on verdict
(c) Correction by court

(a) In General

Improper remarks, argument, or conduct is no ground for reversal if the complaining party is not prejudiced thereby.

Unless it appears that the acts complained of resulted in substantial prejudice to the party complaining, a cause will not ordinarily be reversed for improper remarks;[76] nor will a cause be reversed for

"It is not every improper argument made to a jury that will necessitate a reversal."

Tex.—City of Pampa v. Todd, Civ.App., 39 S.W.2d 636, 638, reversed on other grounds, Com.App., 59 S.W.2d 114.

Reason for rule

"It is the presumption of law that jurors are intelligent, honest, fearless and just. Courts are not justified in assuming that the mind of the jury is of such plastic and unreliable material as to at any unjustified word of debate neglect the instructions, abandon the evidence and disregard their oaths."

Ill.—Devine v. Chicago City R. Co., 167 Ill.App. 361, 364.

Fair construction of language used

Legal consequences of argument of counsel must be determined by a fair construction of language used, rather than by imaginative guesses as to inferences which jury might have drawn from it.

N.H.—Whipple v. Boston & Maine R. R., 7 A.2d 239, 90 N.H. 261.

Partisan zeal

In determining whether the argument of counsel to the jury was prejudicial, the appellate court must recognize that allowance should be made for the zeal of partisan counsel.

Tex.—Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Shudde, Civ.App., 76 S.W.2d 561.

Renewing discussion after ruling

It is not reversible error for an attorney to renew his appeal to the court to permit a line of argument which has been held improper.

Furnishing informal brief

In an action on a fire policy, that plaintiff's attorneys, after argument, tendered to the judge and he read an accountant's report concerning books and matters of account which had been introduced in evidence to show the amount and value of plaintiff's stock when the fire occurred, and also sent to the judge, without serving it on opposing counsel, a summary of plaintiff's testimony as to the value of the destroyed property, the whole being in the nature of a written argument and informal brief, was held not reversible error, where plaintiff's counsel made no closing argument, and there was no order that the case stand submitted, and subsequently defendant's counsel furnished the court with a "memoranda of figures used on argument."

Cal.—Coniglio v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 182 P. 275, 180 C. 596, 5 A.L.R. 805.

A judgment will not be set aside for misconduct of counsel in reading parts of a deposition which were excluded, where it appears that they were read while arguing the question of their admissibility to the court.

Iowa.—Rogers v. Winch, 41 N.W. 214, 76 Iowa 546.

Testifying in behalf of client

Breach of canon of professional ethics providing that when lawyer is witness for client, except as to merely formal matters, he should leave trial of case to other counsel, and except when essential to ends of justice lawyer should avoid testifying in court in behalf of his client, is not reversible error.

Burden on party in fault

The party in fault is bound, after verdict in his favor, to obtain a finding that the result was not affected by his tort, and ought not to be annulled on account of it; and a verdict will be set aside for unwarranted remarks of counsel to the jury unless the presiding judge finds as a matter of fact that the jury were not influenced thereby, or that the effect upon their minds was wholly removed by a retraction of counsel, the charge of the court, or in some other way.

Untruthful professional witness

An argument in a personal injury action that a doctor who testified in the case was a professional witness for defendant and that he was careless of the truth was held not reversible error under the facts.

Ill.—Metz v. Yellow Cab Co., 248 Ill.App. 609.

Attack on deposition

An argument attacking a deposition, because the jury could not see the deposing witness, and did not know whether he was a half-wit, yellow man, or black man, or whether the deposing witness suffered from defendant's claim agent's hands, referring to evidence regarding plaintiff's statement to the claim agent, was held not prejudicial.

Erroneous unconfirmed statement

Even though a statement of the law by the counsel for the adverse

the jury the effect on the judgment of their answers to questions where the jury must have known the effect[98] or cautioning them to harmonize the general verdict and special findings,[99] stating an opinion as to the amount of the verdict that the jury should award,[1] or failing to reveal that a juror was a former client of an associate of counsel, where such counsel did not recognize him at the trial.[2]

Nor will the case be reversed where remarks which were not necessarily prejudicial were addressed to the court and were made in good faith,[3] where it does not appear that the jury heard the remarks,[4] where the facts in the improper statement are related without objection,[5] where attorneys for both parties made improper argument,[6] where the jury acted in an advisory capacity only and the findings were finally made by the court,[7] or when the language and conduct of counsel is not connected with some judicial error on the part of the trial judge.[8] So, improper conduct in arguing after opposing counsel had waived argument is immaterial where appellant did not object.[9]

(b) Absence of Effect on Verdict

A judgment will not be reversed for improper acts, arguments, or remarks of counsel which had no influence on the verdict.

It is very generally held that a judgment will not be reversed because of improper acts, arguments, or remarks of counsel where the verdict is right or shows that they had no influence thereon,[10]

"The reasonable test and most pertinent inquiry always is whether or not, under all the circumstances, the verdict of the jury has probably been affected."

Tex.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Pool, Civ.App., 31 S.W.2d 850, 853.

No objection to verdict

Defendant could not complain that the argument of plaintiff's counsel was prejudicial where the only point to the contention was that the argument caused the jury to render an incorrect verdict, and defendant urged no objection to the verdict.

Tex.—Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows v. Wilkinson, Civ.App., 83 S.W.2d 705.

Remark sustained by record

In an action against the widow and her transferee to recover property fraudulently obtained by the widow under a promise of marriage made without intention of performing, the statement of plaintiff's counsel, "These two thieves did not trust each other," was held not to require reversal, in view of the showing of fraud and the transferee's participation therein, although the court failed to instruct the jury not to consider counsel's remark, where there was no evidence of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury.

the evidence would have warranted a verdict greater than that returned by the jury,[14] where the verdict was for less than the minimum amount suggested as a verdict by plaintiff's counsel in argument which he said would be sustained[15] or is only a very small percentage of the amount asked as damages in the complaint,[16] or where on the facts the party complaining was not entitled to a recovery.[17] Under these circumstances it is immaterial that the court failed to instruct the jury not to consider improper arguments or remarks of counsel.[18]

(c) Correction by Court

Improper arguments or remarks of counsel may be rendered harmless by corrective action by the court.

It has very frequently been held that improper arguments or remarks of counsel may be rendered harmless by corrective action taken by the court, as by an instruction to the jury to disregard them;[19] and that error in making improper remarks is cured where the court instructs the jury to disregard the objectionable language,[20] or where the court reproves offending counsel and the remarks are withdrawn.[21] So, where an objection to an improper remark in argument is sustained, the judgment will not be reversed because of such argument unless substantial rights are prejudiced thereby.[22]

(2) Prejudicial Error

A judgment will be reversed for prejudicial acts, arguments, or remarks of counsel.

Although reversal will be granted only in extreme cases,[23] if it is apparent or probable that the act, argument, or remarks of counsel complained of were prejudicial, the cause must be reversed,[24] as,

Case tried to court

Ordinarily, courts hesitate to reverse a case tried to a court for misconduct of appellee's counsel, but will do so where he went beyond the limits permissible even in such trial.

Ariz.—Frankel v. Frankel, 18 P.2d 911, 41 Ariz. 396.

Effect on verdict not sole test

Fact that attorney's statement before jury may have had some effect on verdict would not of itself make statement "prejudicial" in the legal sense if it was not otherwise subject to objection.

Reason for rule

Refusal to withdraw from the jury or instruct them not to regard improper argument is a tacit approval thereof.
Tex.—Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co. of Texas v. Thomason, Civ.App., 3 S.W.2d 106.

Merely allowing exception

Allowing an exception to the argument, without warning the jury to disregard it, is, in effect, a ruling that the argument was proper.

Failure to interfere

Failure on request to restrain counsel from indulging in improper and unwarranted argument is error, although the court states that it will charge the jury on the law of the case.
N.Y.—Jennings v. Kosmak, 45 N.Y. S. 802, 20 Misc. 300.

Insufficient instruction

Error in overruling objection to counsel's argument based on the failure of the executor's lawyer who drew the will to testify is not cured by an instruction that it is a reprehensible practice in lawyers to testify.

Question of law

Whether there is reasonable doubt of the harmful effect of an improper argument is a question of law.

such steps as are possible to eradicate the improper effect of the action complained of.[31] So, if remarks are in fact prejudicial, it is of no consequence that they are not designedly so;[32] but in determining whether they are prejudicial, it has been held that the test is whether there was such a lack of good faith on the part of counsel, under all the circumstances, that it cannot reasonably be said that appellant's rights were not prejudiced thereby.[32.5]

In accordance with these principles the judgment has been reversed for misconduct of counsel in making inflammatory and unjustified remarks,[33] for

Failure to call witness

It is reversible error for counsel in argument to draw unfavorable inference or make unfavorable comment on failure of opposite party to call as a witness one whose testimony is equally accessible and available to both parties.

Mo.—Hancock v. Union Pacific R. Co., App., 231 S.W.2d 225.

Misstating defense

Repeated statements of plaintiffs' counsel in his argument to the jury, in an action against a railroad company for injuries resulting from negligent operation of its trains, that syphilis was the defense, after denial thereof by defendant, coupled with vituperative language and statements that defendant had charged plaintiff with indecency, was held so prejudicial as to require reversal of judgments for plaintiffs, in view of the trial judge's failure to sustain an objection or otherwise make certain that the jury would disregard such appeal to passion and prejudice.

U.S.—New York Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson, Mo., 49 S.Ct. 300, 279 U.S. 310, 73 L.Ed. 706, amended on other grounds 49 S.Ct. 417.

Offense by experienced attorney

An old and experienced lawyer is charged with knowledge of the effect on the jury of unjustifiably attempting to destroy the credibility of defendant as a witness.

Ex parte discussions with court

Although information supplied ex parte by plaintiff's attorney in a series of ex parte discussions with the court concerning facts allegedly not in the record may not have influenced the result, such practice is so inherently dangerous that judgment for plaintiff was reversed and a new trial ordered.

of the effect on the judgment of their answers to questions which have a significance which a mind untrained in law may not grasp,[43] discussing the legal significance of a definition given by the court,[44] or violating rules of court governing opening statements or arguments,[44.5] as by not presenting his whole case in his opening argument as required by rule of court,[45] and for persistently overindulging in misconduct or unguarded remarks which otherwise would not require a reversal.[46]

b. Presentation of Evidence

Misconduct in the presentation of evidence is not ground for reversal unless prejudice results therefrom.

In order for misconduct of counsel in the presentation of evidence to effect a reversal of the judgment it must appear that substantial prejudice resulted therefrom, and that the jury were influenced thereby to the material detriment of the party complaining.[47] Accordingly, in the absence of a showing of prejudice, the case will not be reversed because of the misconduct of counsel in "Some allowance must be made for the fact that in the progress of a jury trial, where there is little time for deliberation, things will be said and done that would be omitted on second thought. Besides, much that occurs on a trial is not included in the transcript of evidence, or is not seen in its true light when all that occurred is not before this court. So the rule is that a new trial will not be granted on this ground, unless there was a clear abuse of the privilege of counsel, preventing a fair trial of the case."

propounding leading questions to a witness,[50] or in asking questions directed to issues not passed on by the jury,[51] presenting papers for identification without subsequently offering them in evidence,[52] nor for persistent objections to cross-examination,[53] improper remarks in offering evidence,[53.5] or in urging objections to evidence,[54] or in consenting to the striking of testimony,[55] particularly where it is not shown that counsel was not acting in good faith.[56] So the error is harmless where the court sustained objections to the questions or evidence,[57] and instructed the jury to disregard the questions propounded or evidence offered,[57.5] or eradicated the error in admitting testimony by emphatic direction to the jury to disregard such evidence;[58] and it will not be assumed that the trial court, sitting without a jury, in the trial of a civil action, was prejudiced by suggestions of fact contained in questions or offers of evidence to which objections were sustained.[59]

Where no effort was made to withdraw objectionable testimony put into the record before the court could rule on its admissibility, however, and it is apparent that the jury gave it some weight, the case must be reversed;[60] and likewise it will be reversed for misconduct in asking questions or offering evidence conveying improper information to the jury and tending to render the trial unfair,[61] persistently injecting or seeking to inject incompetent or irrelevant evidence into the case,[62] or asking questions in defiance of the court's rulings[63] or in vio-

Form of question

In a tenant's action for assault with a pistol by a landlord, improper questions by plaintiff's counsel in cross-examining the landlord as to whether he had ejected a former tenant and assaulted him while he was confined to his bed, which were so worded that each succeeding question assumed, despite exclusion of the answer, that the prior question had been answered favorably to plaintiff, when the testimony elicited would have been incompetent, constituted such misconduct of the attorney as to warrant reversal.

lation of stipulations made by counsel.[64] So, notwithstanding instructions of the court to the jury to disregard the objectionable questions, the case must be reversed where the questions were highly inflammatory and apparently influenced the jury in making up their verdict.[65]

c. Reference to Defendant's Insurance or Other Indemnity

Reference to defendant's insurance or lack of insurance is not ground for reversal unless prejudicial to the complaining party.

Under the general rule that error is to be regarded as harmless where not prejudicial to the complaining party, an improper reference on the part of counsel to the fact that defendant is protected by insurance may be harmless,[66] as where it is cured by instructions that it be disregarded,[66.5] or where the reference is merely incidental or it may be presumed that the jury understood that defendant was insured or were properly informed of such fact.[67] Further, a judgment for plaintiff will not be reversed where misconduct of counsel with reference to the allusion to insurance occurred in a colloquy between the attorneys of codefendants in which plaintiff's attorney took no part.[68] Where prejudice results therefrom, however, a remark or argument of counsel which refers to the fact that

Improper imputations

If an improper statement is made by counsel and improper questions asked by him and rulings of the court disregarded, all for the purpose of casting an imputation of unlawful conduct against one of the parties, such unlawful conduct not being a question material to the issue, such harm is done as requires the setting aside of the verdict obtained by such means.

Custom of automobile owners to carry liability insurance against loss or damage has become so general that jurors must be assumed to be cognizant of the fact, and the tendency to refuse reversals for bringing before jury carrying of indemnity insurance by defendant is proper, especially where it appears that no improper practice has been resorted to.

defendant is covered by insurance may be reversible error,[69] as where the jury are informed that the loss will fall on an insurance company;[70] and misconduct in claiming in the argument that defendant was protected by insurance when the evidence failed to show that he was so protected, and after being admonished by the trial court to eliminate the subject of insurance from the argument, is error requiring a reversal of the case.[71]

It has been held to be reversible error to suggest in argument that defendant, if found liable, would be required to pay personally, his insurer not being liable,[72] although a suggestion that no insurance company was interested in the case has also been held not prejudicial to plaintiff.[72.5]

Other phases of harmless or prejudicial error with reference to comments on, or allusions to, the fact of insurance have been considered in § 1707 in connection with the making of such comments or allusions on the voir dire examination of prospective jurors, and in § 1709 in connection with the introduction of testimony.

Reference to witness as "adjuster"
In automobile case, where plaintiff's attorney alluded three times by question and in argument, allegedly inadvertently, to witness as an "adjuster," although on objection he stated that there was no insurance company in case and that by "adjuster" he meant anyone who takes statements, defendant was entitled to new trial on ground that jury had been informed that defendant was probably protected by insurance, since an "adjuster" in the insurance business is an agent of the company charged with investigation and adjustment of claims and intervention of "adjuster" suggests an insurance company.

Although plaintiffs had right to proceed only against automobile liability insurer in action based on guest's injuries sustained in automobile accident, argument made by plaintiff's counsel after motorist was made a party defendant, that the lawsuit did not involve the motorist but was a suit between the plaintiffs and insurer, was improper and prejudicial even though motorist was in default at time of trial, since argument tended to eliminate motorist from liability for damages and emphasized that insurer alone would be liable.

Absence of request

That counsel, by reason of the court's withdrawal of the issue of punitive damages, made no argument thereon to the jury, although the court later decided to submit such issue, is not ground for reversal, in the absence of a request for leave to make further argument.

S.C.—Lumpkin v. Mankin, 134 S.E. 503, 136 S.C. 506.

Where record precludes recovery

It is unnecessary to consider plaintiff's assignment of error concerning a restriction on argument of counsel, where plaintiff's failure of proof prevented recovery in any event.

Or.—Rosenwald v. Oregon City Transp. Co., 163 P. 831, 84 Or. 15, modified on other grounds 164 P. 189, 84 Or. 15.

Ga.—Morris v. City Council of Augusta, 48 S.E.2d 855, 204 Ga. 26.

Where parties stipulated as to time limit for argument, with understanding that only the stipulated time would be allowed to argue both the main case and the damages, refusal of court to allow defendants additional time to argue question of damages was not arbitrary, and did not, under the circumstances, constitute reversible error.

Utah.—Lodder v. Western Pac. R. Co., 259 P.2d 589.

Request to inform jury of absence of insurance

In action by taxicab passenger for personal injuries against cab company and driver of automobile which struck cab, where, before selection of jury, passenger's counsel had been informed that automobile driver carried liability policy, and on voir dire examination counsel had inquired if any member of panel was employed by, or had any direct interest in, company issuing liability policy, denial of cab company's request to inform jury that cab company did not carry insurance was not prejudicial error.

(2) So, where the court ruled that the burden of proof on a certain point was on defendant, no harm ensued to defendant thereby, when, as a matter of fact, plaintiff actually assumed such burden.
Fla.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Brown, 53 So. 838, 60 Fla. 115.

(3) Even where a party erroneously assumes the burden of proof as to a particular matter or the burden of evidence as to particular facts, the mistake will not be corrected on appeal.
N.M.—Citizens Finance Co. v. Cole, 134 P.2d 550, 47 N.M. 73.

(4) Also, where at trial a party voluntarily assumes burden of proof, it is not cause for reversal of a judgment rendered against him that burden of proof was cast by pleadings on the other party.
Kan.—Bradbury v. Wise, 208 P.2d 209, 167 Kan. 737.

(5) In equity case heard orally by chancellor, it is immaterial whether or when burden of proof shifts, provided chancellor hears all the testimony offered and renders a correct decision.
Ky.—Saylor v. Saylor, 138 S.W.2d 316, 282 Ky. 246.

Error favorable to appellant

(1) Defendant railroad company is not prejudiced by a ruling that evidence as to a conversation between plaintiff and its flagman, part of the res gestæ was admissible only to impeach the flagman, who had denied such conversation, such conversation being admissible as substantive evidence.
Ky.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Messer, 175 S.W. 360, 164 Ky. 218, reheard 176 S.W. 1200, 165 Ky. 506.

(2) So, the erroneous ruling of the court, in an action by a teacher for breach of a contract of employment, that plaintiff should show the amount realized from other employment, instead of leaving such matters for defendant to show, was not harmful to defendant, who brought out the facts on cross-examination.
Colo.—School Dist. No. 3 in Clear Creek County v. Nash, 140 P. 473, 27 Colo.App. 551.

(3) Error in preventing documentary evidence, which was admitted over defendant's objection, from being read or commented on to the jury was not prejudicial to him.
Okl.—Bilby v. Brockman, 155 P. 257, 55 Okl. 714.

Failure to produce evidence

(1) Error, if any, for failure to introduce in evidence documents showing the appointment of a guardian ad litem was held not prejudicial where the documents were part of the files in the case.
Cal.—Henry v. Garden Grove Union High School Dist. of Orange County, 7 P.2d 192, 119 C.A. 638.

(2) Failure to offer testimony as to facts which are within common observation and general knowledge of men requiring no special proof was not prejudicial error.
Ohio.—Miller v. Beard, App., 136 N. E.2d 366.

Judicial notice

(1) Appellate court will not reverse for error in taking of judicial notice where no prejudice results.
Cal.—Baggesi v. Baggesi, 224 P.2d 894, 100 C.A.2d 828—Townsend v. Perry, 110 P.2d 1019, 43 C.A.2d 380.

Minn.—Patterson v. Consumers Roofing Co., 295 N.W. 401, 209 Minn. 50.

(2) Refusal of the court to take judicial notice of proclamations of the president was error, although harmless, where corrected by notice taken by the reviewing court.
Mass.—Phillips v. Davis, 147 N.E. 96, 251 Mass. 263, certiorari denied Davis v. Phillips, 46 S.Ct. 101, 269 U.S. 573, 70 L.Ed. 418.

(3) In action by building contractor's assignee for breach of plumbing sub-contract, admission of defendants' testimony concerning matters of which plaintiff maintained that court should have taken judicial notice was not error, where court expressly limited testimony to what was then custom in plumbing business and did not permit witness to testify as to law with respect to priorities required to obtain plumbing materials.
Cal.—Nix v. Heald, 203 P.2d 847, 90 C.A.2d 723.

Matters already in evidence

(1) Where documents have been introduced in evidence without objection, a second offer is superfluous, and hence it is not prejudicial to permit the documents to be read in evidence.
Ala.—National Surety Co. v. Citizens' Light, Heat & Power Co., 78 So. 834, 201 Ala. 456.

(2) Failure formally to introduce contracts in evidence, in a suit to recovery money paid thereunder, is not reversible error, where they were marked as exhibits, identified, and handed to the court, and their binding force was proved by testimony.
Mich.—McKenzie v. West Detroit Land Co., 216 N.W. 438, 241 Mich. 129.

(3) Where three witnesses were permitted without objection to give their opinions as to husband's fitness to raise his son, examination of fourth witness calling for opinion as to husband's fitness to raise son was not prejudicial error.
Cal.—Munson v. Munson, 166 P.2d 268, 27 C.2d 659.

(4) In action by police officer against taxicab company for injuries sustained when motorcycle which officer was riding collided with cab, where record of cab driver's plea of guilty to offense of aggravated assault with motor vehicle was received in evidence, no error was disclosed by showing that cab driver was questioned about the plea of guilty or that inquiry as to record was made of clerk of county court at law.
Tex.—Fisher v. Leach, Civ.App., 221 S.W.2d 384, error refused no reversible error.

(5) Fact that defendant had been directed by trial court to furnish a specimen of her handwriting, to be used as aid in determining whether defendant had written a document which plaintiff testified was in defendant's handwriting, could not have been prejudicial to defendant, where there were in evidence at the time two admittedly genuine specimens of defendant's handwriting which could have been used for purpose of making the comparison.
Wash.—Mitchell v. Mitchell, 166 P. 2d 938, 24 Wash.2d 701.

as to the justice of the verdict;[76] where the evi- | dence was immaterial[77] or where the evidence was

Offer of proof

(1) Refusal of the judge to receive an offer of proof was harmless, where an inclusive offer was thereafter received.

Mass.—Starks v. O'Hara, 165 N.E. 127, 266 Mass. 310.

(2) In action to recover the unpaid balance due on a building contract, rulings on respondent's various objections to appellant's offers of proof with respect to the alleged cutting off of words "final payment" on a check sent by respondent to appellant was not prejudicial, where respondent did not attempt to prove an accord and satisfaction based on alleged notation and court made no finding as to who trimmed check or when it was done.

Wash.—Kellogg v. Wilcox, 283 P.2d 677, 46 Wash.2d 558, rehearing denied 286 P.2d 114, 46 Wash.2d 558.

Purpose of offer

(1) The error of trial court in concluding that plaintiff offered regulator in evidence for limited purpose of determining its outward appearance and in perhaps misleading defendant to believe that mechnical aspect would not be considered was harmless, where regulator was properly identified and proper foundation was laid by plaintiff before mechanical operation of regulator was presented to jury.

Ariz.—Witt Ice & Gas Co. v. Bedway, 231 P.2d 952, 72 Ariz. 152.

(2) In action against truck owner for injuries sustained by brakeman in collision between truck and train, trial court did not commit reversible error in limiting brakeman's petition in prior actions and in admitting them only for the purpose of impeaching the brakeman rather than for all purposes.

Tex.—Gillette Motor Transp. Co. v. Whitfield, Civ.App., 197 S.W.2d 157, affirmed 200 S.W.2d 624, 145 Tex. 571.

Preliminary matters

(1) Error cannot be predicated on the claim that preliminary to the introduction of certain photographs offered by plaintiff the court was more exacting of him than of defendant under similar circumstances, where the ultimate fact appears that the photographs in both cases were admitted in evidence.

Cal.—De La Torre v. Johnson, 264 P. 485, 203 C. 374.

(2) Where letter report of company engineer was admissible in evidence, and court was aware of contents from counsels' discussion, although it were better practice for court to have examined letter before its introduction, party suffered no prejudice from failure of court to so examine letter.

N.H.—Derby v. Public Service Co. of N. H., 119 A.2d 335, 100 N.H. 53.

Treating matter as in evidence

(1) Where suits to enforce liens were tried together, and in one of the suits one of defendants testified to a written agreement between him and the principal contractors for the construction of the building, and identified it as an exhibit offered and received in one of the other cases, it is not reversible error for the court to regard it as in evidence in such case, although it was not formally reoffered therein.

Wyo.—Phelan v. Cheyenne Brick Co., 188 P. 354, 26 Wyo. 493, rehearing denied 189 P. 1103, 26 Wyo. 493.

(2) So in an action on an official bond, failure formally to introduce the bond in evidence was harmless, where the parties and the court treated it as in evidence.

Okl.—Hughes v. Board of Com'rs of Oklahoma County, 150 P. 1029, 50 Okl. 410, error dismissed 37 S.Ct. 400, 243 U.S. 625, 61 L.Ed. 527.

(3) Statement by trial court, "No, it is in the record already," after plaintiff's counsel, during examination of one of defendants, directed witness' attention to certain pages of his deposition and asked him to read a question commencing on certain line of first of such pages, did not establish that deposition was in evidence, so that court did not commit prejudicial error in failing to read it, where court, immediately after such statement, said to counsel, "Let the witness read and then, of course, you can read such portions into the record as you desire," and counsel made no suggestion that such deposition was already in evidence when he offered depositions of all defendants in evidence during his closing argument.

Subsequent failure to object

In an action for personal injuries, a layman's testimony as to the physical appearance of plaintiff and conversations with him, admitted only on the question of his ability to come into court to testify, if error, was not prejudicial to defendant, where defendant did not object to the introduction of testimony of plaintiff given at a former trial.

Mo.—Slinkard v. Lamb Const. Co., App., 212 S.W. 61, affirmed 225 S.W. 352, 286 Mo. 623.

Tentative rulings

Separate rulings which were merely tentative and became merged in the final ruling on the evidence cannot serve to bring about a reversal of the judgment.

Identification of photograph

In an action for damages for the death of a seven-year-old boy, admitting a photograph of deceased, and permitting the mother on the witness stand to identify the photograph, where the mother wept as she identified her son's picture, was harmless error, the case not being closely contested and the evidence clearly establishing that the death was due to defendant's negligence.

Strongly corroborated witness

Error, if any, in permitting the examination of an expert witness as to whether he had not been complimented in an opinion of another court, was held not to require reversal, where his testimony was strongly corroborated.

Right of plaintiff to sue

Where defendants denied that plaintiff was a proper party to bring the action, the error, if any, in connection with the admission in evidence of a probate court's order, offered by plaintiff, authorizing plaintiff as administrator to sue for the amount allegedly owed by defendants, was harmless where it was not contended that the order in question was read into the record to the jury, or sent to the jury room as an exhibit, or that the contents thereof were in any manner brought to the jury's attention.

Where errors have occurred in rulings on evidence of such a character as to have deprived the party of the opportunity to present his case fairly to the jury on the legitimate evidence in the case, the court should reverse the judgment.[90] Accordingly, erroneous rulings will operate to reverse where the case is close on the facts,[91] where the ruling was made in accordance with an erroneous theory of the issues in the case,[92] where the result of the ruling is to confuse the issue,[93] or where a ruling on the scope and effect of the evidence was not made[93.5] or where such a ruling was made and it was too restrictive.[94]

Error in admitting or excluding depositions is without prejudice where they could not have affected the result;[95] but the rule is otherwise where appellant was thereby deprived of a fair trial.[96]

In equity judgments are not ordinarily reversed on appeal because of erroneous rulings on evidence.[97]

Proceedings before referee. Erroneous rulings as to evidence by a referee in proceedings before him are not ground for reversal if the parties are not prejudiced thereby,[98] as where the referee reports in favor of the complaining party,[99] where, although evidence is improperly admitted, there is sufficient evidence properly in the record to sustain the findings,[1] or where evidence improperly admitted was not taken into consideration in making the decision.[2] So, where the report is merely advisory, the admission of improper evidence is not fatal on appeal, the trial court having power to reject the conclusions of the referee and draw its own conclusions from the legal evidence in the case.[3]

The admission of incompetent evidence constitutes reversible error, however, where there is no competent evidence to sustain the finding of the referee as to a material fact,[4] or where the other evidence is not so conclusive as to have justified the direction of a verdict were the trial before a jury.[5]

(1) In pedestrian's action for injuries received when struck by automobile, exclusion of reference to, and evidence of, subsequent injury received in fall which was allegedly caused by original injury, without permitting counsel for pedestrian to make offer of proof, held reversible error.

Mich.—Campbell v. Brown, 267 N.W. 877, 276 Mich. 449.

(2) Where material evidence which has been excluded is placed before the jury by action of the court without giving the opposing party an opportunity to answer it, a new trial is required.

N.C.—Smith v. Stanfield Hosiery Mill, 194 S.E. 83, 212 N.C. 661.

Reading exhibits

Erroneous refusal of the court to allow counsel to read certain letters which were properly admitted in evidence to the jury, and directing the jury to take them as exhibits into the jury room, is prejudicial.

§ 1716. Rulings on Objections to Questions

a. In general
b. Questions improper in form
c. On cross-examination
d. On redirect examination

a. In General

(1) Overruling objections
(2) Sustaining objections

(1) Overruling Objections

Error in overruling an objection to a question is ground for reversal only if the appellant is prejudiced thereby.

Although a judgment will be reversed for prejudicial error in permitting or requiring a witness to answer an incompetent question,[7] error in overruling an objection to a question will not constitute a ground for reversal where no prejudice results to the party complaining.[8]

This rule has been applied where the answer was

swers desired were not elicited from the witness.[17]

Likewise, the rule has been applied where the answer was meaningless,[18] innocuous or harmless,[18.5] or incomplete,[18.10] or so indefinite that the jury could not have been aided or misled thereby[19] or related to immaterial facts,[20] where the fact elicited by the improper question was shown by competent evidence[21] or was merely a repetition of what the witness[22] or other witnesses[22.5] had already testified to without objection, where the answer to a question calling for a conclusion merely stated a fact,[23] where the answer to a question asking the opinion of a witness on a matter on which expert evidence was inadmissible was a matter of common knowledge,[24] where the court instructed the jury to disregard the evidence elicited by the improper question,[25] or where counsel explains and limits the subject of the inquiry.[25.5]

Any error in allowing a question to be propounded to a witness, as to contradictory statements made to a third person, would be cured by the evidence of such third person when called to prove the contradictory statement that no such statement was made.[26] So permitting a question merely preliminary or introductory in character to be answered is generally deemed harmless.[27]

(2) Sustaining Objections

A ruling sustaining an objection is not reversible error if the complaining party is not prejudiced thereby.

When an incompetent question is asked and the court sustains an objection to it, there is no cause for reversal.[28]

Error in sustaining an objection to a question will not operate to reverse when not prejudicial to the party complaining,[29] as where the question is answered notwithstanding the objection,[30] where it does not appear that the answer was within the knowledge of the witness[31] or what the testimony of the witness would have been in answer to the question,[32] where the question was put to an expert who declined to express an opinion when all of the facts were hypothesized,[33] where the hypothetical question did not include one of the determinative facts of the proof,[34] where the fact assumed in a hypothetical question was clearly disproved by the manifest weight of the evidence,[35] where the matter sought to be elicited by the answer was not material,[36] where the question was not answered,[36.5]

It was not prejudicial error to refuse to allow a question to an expert as not sufficiently specific, where the court in its ruling intimated that it would entertain a specific question.[41]

b. Questions Improper in Form

The allowance of a question which is in improper form is not reversible error unless substantial rights of the complaining party are thereby affected.

Allowing a question improper in form does not constitute reversible error where no substantial rights of the party objecting were affected thereby.[42]

This principle has been applied where the question is in form leading,[43] calls for a conclusion of

Prejudicial conclusion of expert

Where, in an action for personal injury, the evidence was conflicting on the question whether the injury caused tuberculosis of plaintiff and there was evidence that several members of his family had died from tuberculosis, error in allowing a question put a physician as to whether or not in his judgment as a physician the tuberculosis would be the natural and proximate result of the injury, because calling for a conclusion and not for an opinion merely, was prejudicial to defendant.

Hypothetical question

In a malpractice action, a hypothetical question asked a physician whether in his opinion this doctor, in treating this baby, exercised that degree of skill, care, and learning ordinarily possessed and exercised by physicians and surgeons practicing in the city in the treatment of a similar condition, although incorrect in form because of the reference to "this physician" instead of "a physician," was not prejudicial error in absence of a showing of prejudice or objection at the time specifically pointing out the vice in the question.

While it is better practice to reduce a hypothetical question to writing, where the facts are confusing and complicated, allowance of an oral hypothetical question, based on previous questions, amendments, objections, and colloquy, cannot be treated as reversible error.

Admission of the answer to a question to a medical witness assuming that the witness had testified to a certain condition of an injury was not prejudicial where such witness later testified that such condition existed.

Testing ability of expert

permitting a witness to assume a fact.[51] No complaint can be made of a hypothetical question where the only difference between the facts proved and those embraced in the question is a matter of phraseology and not of substance.[52]

This rule has been applied under the following circumstances: Where the matter sought to be established was otherwise sufficiently proved,[53] was not questioned in the pleadings or evidence,[54] or would have been presumed if the question had not been asked;[55] where another question objectionable on the same grounds was asked without objection;[56] where the issue on which an answer to an improper question was allowed was subsequently gone into fully by both parties;[57] where, notwithstanding the defective form of the question, it was apparent that the witness and the jury were not misled,[58] or where the finding is such as to render the error harmless;[58.5] where the decision of the case was not based on such matter;[58.10] where facts omitted from a hypothetical question were brought to the attention of the witness and the jury on examination or cross-examination,[59] or where they were undisputed;[59.5] where the witness stated that he did not understand the question;[59.10] where the complaining party was given an opportunity to covery was sought because of such disease, and the hypothetical question was asked merely to test the ability of the witness as an expert.

Technical variation from evidence

In a malpractice action against a surgeon, a technical variation from the evidence in stating a fact for the hypothetical question, if error, was held not prejudicial in view of testimony on cross-examination.

supply omitted facts[60] and failed to do so;[60.5] or where rebuttal evidence sustained the hypothetical case;[61] where the court instructed the jury that the answer to a hypothetical question assuming facts not proved should not be considered if there was a failure to prove such facts,[62] or where the error was cured on cross-examination;[62.5] or where the error in overruling an objection to the question is cured by the nature of the answer itself.[63] The fact that the court subsequently withdrew from the consideration of the jury some of the elements that entered into the question did not render a hypothetical question improper at the time it was asked.[64]

Reversible error. Permitting answers to leading questions will constitute reversible error where the answers elicited are the only basis in the evidence for an instruction given on a material issue,[65] where the question properly objected to is on the controverted material issue,[66] or where aside from the answers it cannot be said that there is sufficient evidence to warrant the verdict.[67] So the case must be reversed where facts improperly assumed in a hypothetical question were of a prejudicial nature.[68]

c. On Cross-Examination

Error in ruling on objections to questions asked on cross-examination is not ground for reversal where no harm resulted.

Although the rule is otherwise where the error is prejudicial to the complaining party,[69] rulings on

Instruction to "absolutely disregard"
In an action for injury to an automobile struck by a street car at an intersection, plaintiff's improper hypothetical question to his expert witness, with his answer, as to the distance a street car must travel to attain twelve miles an hour after stopping, intended to disprove defendant's testimony that it had stopped, was cured by the court's injunction to the jury to "absolutely disregard" the testimony, the verdict not indicating noncompliance.

Impeaching testimony

Any error in not permitting further cross-examination of witness was harmless where party seeking further cross-examination introduced in evidence impeaching testimony for which further cross-examination was sought.

Refusal of statutory examination

Error, if any, in forbidding plaintiff to examine a witness under the statute was harmless where plaintiff sought to be elicited was immaterial;[75] where the direct testimony on the matter sought to be elicited was very full[76] or proved the matter sought to be elicited on cross-examination;[77] where the adverse party admitted the matter sought to be elicited on cross-examination,[78] or the matter was not in dispute;[79] where the witness gave a negative answer;[79.5] where the question was not answered;[79.10] where the party aggrieved afterward has opportunity to question the witness on direct examination with reference to the matter sought to be elicited on cross-examination, or could have produced other evidence as to such matter, and fails to do so;[80] where in a subsequent examination of the witness he disclaimed knowledge concerning was allowed extremely wide latitude in cross-examination of the witness.

Change of ruling

A ruling denying a defendant the right to cross-examine a codefendant after cross-examination under the statute was not prejudicial, where the court later changed the ruling and defendant failed to avail himself of the privilege offered.
Minn.—Lund v. Olson, 234 N.W. 310, 182 Minn. 204, 75 A.L.R. 371.

Dual question

Sustaining an objection to question on cross-examination of plaintiff on ground that question was dual did not constitute error, where record showed that defendant did not press for an answer by proper questions which could easily have been framed, and especially where subject matter had been inquired about and an answer, if given, would have shed no light on the controversy.
Ind.—Newman v. Newman, 48 N.E. 2d 455, 221 Ind. 432.

the matter inquired about;[81] where the ruling did not affect the result;[81.5] where the facts proved clearly preponderate in support of the verdict or judgment;[82] or where the jury found in favor of the complaining party on the issue involved,[83] or on the main issue involved in the case.[83.5]

Error in allowing too great latitude in cross-examination is not prejudicial where the facts elicited are not material;[84] where a verdict is properly directed on motion of the opposite party;[85] where the evidence clearly preponderates in support of the verdict or judgment;[85.5] where the jury found in favor of the complaining party on the issue involved in the improper cross-examination,[86] or on the main issue involved in the case;[86.5] where the cross-examination was not misleading or confusing to the jury;[86.10] where the jury would have arrived at the same conclusion if the question had not been answered;[87] where the testimony was merely cumulative[87.5] or the answer was not responsive;[87.10] where the party cross-examining might have called the witness in his own behalf and elicited the same testimony;[88] where the adverse party called the witness in his own behalf and elicited the same testimony;[88.5] where the adverse party admitted the matter sought to be elicited[88.10] or the matter was not in dispute;[88.15] where evidence as to the facts sought to be elicited is subsequently admitted;[88.20] where the question was not answered;[89] where of substantial prejudice resulting therefrom to the complaining party.[95.5] So a party is not prejudiced by the action of the court in sustaining an objection to a question as to irrelevant matters[96] or matters which were thoroughly covered in the direct and cross-examination of the witness;[97] nor can a reversal be predicated on allowing a witness to repeat on redirect examination a statement made in response to a question on cross-examination which was not prejudicial to the opposite party.[98] Any error in refusing to permit defendant to examine a witness called for cross-examination by plaintiff was harmless, where defendant subsequently introduced the same witness for direct examination.[99]

§ 1717. Rulings Relating to Production and Inspection of Books and Documents

Error in requiring or refusing to require the production of books or documents is harmless where no prejudice results therefrom.

Error in ordering the production of books or documents is harmless where it did not have any prejudicial effect on the disposition of the case on its merits,[1] where a certified copy thereof was attached to appellee's pleadings and had been read to the jury, and appellant later introduced the documents in evidence,[2] where the order was made after appellant's unresponsive answer to an improper question brought out the facts,[3] where the party objecting to the production waived his objection,[4] where the order was not enforced,[5] or where no use was made of the books or documents as evidence.[6]

Absence of jury

In an action against officers for false imprisonment, in connection with an investigation of a murder charge, it was error to require defendant's counsel to furnish plaintiff's counsel with the transcript of the testimony taken on a hearing before a magistrate, but, as it did not occur in the jury's presence, the error was not prejudicial.

Books not introduced in evidence

Error, if any, in ordering production of books was error without prejudice where books were not introduced in evidence and findings by court were not based on them.
Cal.—Manteca Veal Co. v. Corbari, 254 P.2d 884, 116 C.A.2d 896.

On the other hand, the case will not be reversed for error in denying a motion for the production of books and documents where appellant fails to show that he was prejudiced thereby;[7] and the error is harmless where the documents[8] or similar documents[8.5] were afterwards produced and introduced in evidence, where the document was available to both parties,[8.10] where the error is cured on cross-examination,[8.15] where appellants set out a purported verbatim copy of the documents in their pleadings,[9] or where appellee admitted liability to appellant thereunder.[10]

Where a photographic copy was produced at the trial, failure to permit appellant to examine the original there is not ground for reversal where examination was permitted in the appellate court and appellant was unable to show how he had been injured;[11] and prejudicial error cannot be predicated on refusal to permit counsel for defendant to see and inspect a paper shown a witness for the plaintiff and read by him while on the stand at the close of the redirect examination of the witness, but not offered in evidence, where the brief cross-examination of the witness was of such a nature as not to be affected thereby.[12]

§ 1718. Order of Proof, Rebuttal, and Reopening Case

In the absence of prejudice to the complaining party, irregularities in the order of proof are not cause for reversal.

Since there is a presumption that the jury consider the evidence in its entirety, irrespective of the time when, and the order in which, it is introduced,[13] the action of the court in requiring, or permitting, evidence to be introduced out of its proper, logical, and regular order is not ground for reversal unless it appears to be a great abuse of discretion, as discussed supra § 1605, and unless the other party is prejudiced thereby.[14]

After verdict

In a death action against a railroad, permitting plaintiff, after verdict, to introduce an ordinance requiring the maintenance of a flagman at a street crossing, if error, was not prejudicial, where there was no issue of fact with respect to the ordinance, and its admission did not affect the submission of the cause to the jury, and where the fact that defendant hired a flagman and stationed him at the crossing was conceded.

Ky.—Daniel v. Powell, 199 S.W.2d 715, 304 Ky. 52.

Where, on reopening of case on plaintiff's motion for taking of additional evidence, defendant also presented additional evidence, no prejudice to defendant was shown.
Iowa.—Dobler v. Bawden, 25 N.W.2d 866, 238 Iowa 76.

case to receive evidence[19] where the complaining party is unable to show himself prejudiced thereby. There will be no reversal for a refusal of the court to admit certain evidence at a particular stage of the case where no harm resulted.[20]

Reversible error. Where the irregularity, under the circumstances of the case, was prejudicial to appellant, however, reversal is required.[21] So, where testimony which should have been given in chief has been allowed to go in rebuttal, it is reversible error to refuse to permit the adversary to reply thereto in surrebuttal.[22] The judgment will be reversed, where the action of the court in reopening or refusing to reopen the case to receive evidence is prejudicial to the party complaining.[22.5]

§ 1719. Striking or Withdrawing Evidence

a. Striking
b. Withdrawing

a. Striking

Error in ruling on motions to strike evidence is not ground for reversal where the complaining party was not prejudiced thereby.
